BBC ASBESTOS FILM SPARKS PARENT FEARS

But schoolchildren are actually safer than they are 'in their own homes,' says expert

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

CHILDREN are safer from exposure to asbestos in Kent schools than they are in the outside world, according to a building expert for the county authority.

Peter Binnie, head of operations for Kent County Council's Property Group, which manages the authority's estate, sought to reassure parents after a BBC South East investigation revealed that 92 per cent of the schools in the county contain asbestos.

He said: "Schools in Kent have asbestos in them but it is managed, controlled and identified in a very stringent way so there is minimal risk to pupils and teachers.

"Children are better protected there than they are out in their own homes."

Freedom of Information requests revealed that the deadly material is present in 554 of Kent's 559 schools and at 111 of the 116 schools in Medway.

Exposure to asbestos fibres can cause mesothelioma, a cancer of the lining of the lung or more rarely of the abdomen, it remain undetectable for up to 50 years after exposure and is virtually always fatal.

Dr Alastair Stewart, a consultant chest physician and the Kent lead on mesothelioma, said: "If the asbestos is truly well managed then this is a storm in a tea cup."

"But the problem is that we don't really know if it is."

He called for an independent body to regulate asbestos in schools, find where it is and whether it was safe.

"Where the concern really arises is around the fact that the Government has passed responsibility to the schools to assess whether it poses a risk."

"Schools say no we have not got a problem but there is not actually anyone checking whether it is solid enough and cannot be disturbed."

Dr Stewart said the amount of asbestos exposure needed to cause mesothelioma was unknown although it usually occurs in people who have been exposed to small amounts for many years or through really intense exposure.

Mr Binnie told how asbestos is present, especially in rural areas in garages and sheds, and was used in ceilings and wall boarding in homes and other buildings more than 20 years old. KCC and Medway Council said schools were inspected regularly and asbestos management registers were held showing where the hazardous material is found and in what form.

The authorities in the US and Ireland are removing asbestos from all schools and the National Union of Teachers has called for the same precaution to be taken in the UK.

Dr Robin Howie, the asbestos consultant who featured in the programme which was aired on BBC1's Inside Out on Wednesday, said the numbers of teachers dying of asbestos-related illnesses in the UK had risen.

He said this was the "tip of the iceberg" and the iceberg was the children who could have mesothelioma. Mr Binnie said even the schools rebuilding and refurbishment programme would not spell the complete end for asbestos in all schools and that enclosed in walls or ceilings would be left unless it posed a risk or was exposed. He said: "A close friend of mine has asbestosis. I have worked with asbestos for more than 30 years so I'm a potential victim of mesothelioma in the years to come. But you do not know where you have contracted it, it could be schools or it could be somewhere else."

He said he would not be angry if he had contracted an asbestos-related illness before the dangers were known.

"We manage it and look after it now so I would be angry if I was exposed now" he added. "But I have no issue going into any of our schools and I do not think our children or teachers are at risk."

Solid asbestos is quite safe unless it is broken up or damaged and the fibres are released and breathed in.

Estuary airport plan encounters more flak

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

A STUDY in support of London Mayor Boris Johnson's plans for an airport off the Kent coast has fuelled further criticism of the idea.

Earlier this week Mr Johnson unveiled more details of his £40 billion off-shore airport suggestion, but convinced few in Kent that such a proposal would be less damaging than a third runway at Heathrow.

His plan involves splitting the airport in two off the coast of the Isle of Sheppey, with runways on two separate islands in the mouth of the Thames. Passengers would shuttle between the islands in a tunnel below the seabed, running from Essex on the north bank to Kent on the south. The feasibility study was carried out by leading airport engineer Douglas Oakervee, who joined Mr Johnson on a boat trip to the area last week.

Mr Johnson said: "Coming here has put paid to talk of a fantasy island. You get a sense of just how far the airport would be from the shore. I'm convinced this is an option and the Government's decision on Heathrow makes it all the more urgent that we come up with alternatives."

Mr Johnson's proposals for an offshore airport call for two estuary terminals that would be served by road and rail links.

The larger terminal, in Kent, would be connected to Crossrail and the high-speed Channel Tunnel rail link, taking passengers to London in about 35 minutes. The rail connections to Europe would cut out the need for many short-haul flights.

Despite the Mayor's optimism that such a scheme could work, others were not so sure. Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter said he would fight any proposals to build an airport off the coast.

"Environmentally and ecologically, it's a very bad idea to build an airport off one of the most beautiful coastlines in the South East," he said. "To say it would be an eyesore is an understatement. It would be horrendous."

Speaking at a debate on the future of Heathrow in the House of Commons on Wednesday, North Thanet MP Roger Gale also criticised his fellow Tory's idea.

He said: "I am not a fan or a supporter of Boris Island and I do not believe it is a realistic option. Setting aside the fact it would be necessary to remove a recently constructed wind farm to build it, that it would be necessary to persuade tens of thousands of migratory birds to change their habits and that it would be necessary to restructure the traffic of shipping using the Thames, I am sure it is an idea that should be considered and then dismissed."

Mr Gale added that the proposed expansion of Manston airport would be a better way to alleviate the pressure on Heathrow.

However, airport operator BAA felt its third runway plan was the only way to go.

Spokesman Damon Hunt said: "While Manston does have a regional role to play, it clearly does not have the capacity for the level of use that would be generated if a new airport was approved."

Mr Hunt said Mr Johnson's idea would also not work due to the high risk of bird strike on the Thames Estuary and the large cost to the taxpayer of carrying out the scheme.

Coastal authority confident wood will be reported – despite rumours in Thanet

Timber taken from beaches 'being sold at 50p a plank'

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

BRITAIN'S coastal authority says it is confident that people who removed lost timber from Kent's beaches will report their hauls.

The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) is hopeful most of the 500-tonne load that washed up between Ramsgate and Broadstairs last month will eventually be accounted for.

However, that confidence could prove to be unfounded if rumours that some of the wood has already turned up on industrial estates far as little as 50p per plank are true.

The load, which is owned by Swedish firm Rorvik Timber, fell overboard the Russian vessel Sinegorsk as it made its way to Alexandria, Egypt.

The MCA's Mark Clark said: "It's too early to say how much of the load will be reported because it is still coming ashore."

"People have about 28 days to register what they have collected with us, so it will be at least another two months before we know what we're dealing with."

"This sort of thing has happened in the past – when the Kodima lost its load off Cornwall in 2001 – and plenty of people reported what they had gathered. One person had about seven tonnes of it."

"I doubt the owners of the wood will want it back as it is, but they might want to mulch it down into MDF."

Rorvik Timber's insurers WK Webster declined to comment. Failure to report timber removed from Thanet's beaches could result in fines of up to £2,500, but warnings its owners may want the wood back went largely unheeded. One man, who did not want to be named, was putting planks into his motorhome at Ramsgate's East Cliff.

He said: "I'm going to dry it out and build a garden playhouse for my kids. This is my fifth trip. I've been here all night. The wood's good and ideal for what I want it for."

Thanet council's deputy chief executive John Bunnett left the scavengers off his list of acknowledgements when he marked the end of the clean-up operation.

He said: "This has been an excellent example of the council working in partnership with the police, the MCA and Kent County Council to deal with this problem."

"The response was speedy and the fact the clean-up was completed so quickly is a tribute to everyone involved. I'd like to thank all who played a part in this operation."

Devastated dad pays tribute to 'rising star'

A COMMUNITY has vowed to take action against speeding traffic on a notorious road where a 16-year-old was fatally injured, writes Tony Patey.

Bromley lad Josh Callaghan died after an accident with a car outside a school between Northfleet and Gravesend last weekend. Now campaigners want to curb drivers speeding along London Road, which has been the scene of four fatalities in five years.

Residents rushed to the aid of Josh after the accident which happened as he, his father Tim and a friend were walking near Rosherville Primary School. Josh was rushed to hospital but died hours later. There are four schools along the road and on Wednesday one of them – Northfleet Nursery School – held a meeting of residents, police, governors and Kent Highways staff.

They discussed ideas such as speed cameras, pelican crossings and the possibility of local people using equipment to check speeds. The speed limit is 40mph.

Head teacher Panna Nagar said the meeting had been planned for some time. "It is so tragic this latest accident happened before it took place," she said.

Rosherville head teacher Nasib Cheema said: "Parents have complained for a long time about the speeding."

"We have asked for a lower limit but they say it meets requirements."

POPULAR: Josh Callaghan

Devastated Mr Callaghan, of Canon Road, paid tribute to his son: "Josh was a gifted and popular boy who is going to be missed."

"He loved music and could play the drums, guitar and bass. He had a large circle of friends and was a loving son and brother – a bright star who had far to go," he said.

Police were taking any flowers left outside Rosherville to Bromley's Ravens Wood School, where Josh was a year 11 music and drama student.

Head teacher Dr George Berwick said: "The best words used to describe Josh are warm, bubbly, energetic, enthusiastic, mature and friendly. His death will affect us all."

Two cars were involved in the accident, which closed the road between 4pm and 10pm on Saturday, January 24.

The driver of a Vauxhall Vectra, who comes from Rochester, was treated at Darent Valley Hospital and later released.

Police would like to speak with the driver of a small silver vehicle, believed to have been following the car which collided with Josh.

Sgt Glen Braidwood, of Kent Police's serious crash investigation unit, said: "The driver could have information which will help us piece together what happened. I urge them to get in touch as soon as possible."

Soldiers and their families welcome Colonel-in-Chief to barracks

Celebration and sadness as prince visits Gurkhas

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

THE Prince of Wales lent his support to Kent-based Gurkhas fighting in Afghanistan when he paid a visit to their families back home.

Sir John Moore Barracks in Folkestone was the location for Wednesday's royal visit, where the prince also met with four soldiers seriously injured while serving in the war-torn country.

He even took time out to hold a private meeting with Uma Dura – the widow of Colour Sergeant Krishna Dura, who died in a roadside bombing last November.

C/Sgt Dura, 36, was the second Gurkha killed in Afghanistan in the space of two weeks following the death of his comrade Rifleman Yubraj Rai, 28.

Prince Charles, who is the Rifles' Colonel-in-Chief, also received an update on the soldiers' progress abroad.

Major Chris Conroy told him: "We were very unlucky to lose two of the guys before Christmas."

"It's very hard for the families, as would be expected, but we're lucky here that there is a strong community both in the Gurkha community and the local community in Folkestone who can offer considerable support."

The Prince was also presented with flower garlands from C/Sgt Dura's children, Krishtina and Kerbina, as well as other youngsters associated with the regiment.

The royal visit came as the Home Office prepared to announce details of its new policy regarding Gurkhas' rights to settle in the UK.

Last September, High Court judges ruled that the current system of allowing only those soldiers who retired after 1997 to remain in this country was unlawful, and ordered the Home Office to come up with new rules.

According to the Times, a new policy is due to be unveiled "shortly" that could lead to up to 36,000 Gurkha soldiers and their families swapping Nepal for new homes in the UK.

However, earlier this month actress and Gurkha rights campaigner Joanna Lumley accused the Ministry of Defence of exaggerating the numbers.

She said: "The MoD is making wildly exaggerated claims that as many as 50,000 may come. The Home Affairs Select Committee took evidence on this matter last year, and the figure is more likely to be between 3,000 and 5,000."

"Let's face it – even if the MoD's figure was correct, all these retired Gurkhas have earned the right to settle here by serving and fighting in our Army."

A spokesman said the Home Office was still considering its policy changes to ensure they would be fair for all Gurkhas.

DOCUMENTARY: Sir David Attenborough charts Charles Darwin's revolutionary theory

An evolutionary journey begins at Down House

HOW Charles Darwin's theory of evolution revolutionised the way we see and understand the world is explored in a new documentary by Sir David Attenborough.

In the programme on BBC1 the broadcaster begins his journey at the great scientist's home at Down House, near Biggin Hill, in Kent and ends at the Natural History Museum in London.

The point is made that Darwin has shown us we are not set apart from the natural world and do not have dominion over it – we are subject to its laws and processes as other animals are too, the makers said.

The documentary is part of the BBC's celebrations of the 200th anniversary of Darwin's birth and the 150th of the publication of On the Origin of the Species.

His theories in the groundbreaking book, which was radical and very controversial at the time, set out the idea of natural selection.

It was written at his family home near Biggin Hill and he used the garden as an 'out-door laboratory' to study nature and conduct experiments.

Darwin's discoveries were shocking because at the time people believed God had created the world in seven days and evolution was the antithesis to this creationism belief.

Sir David revealed this week that he receives hate mail from viewers for not crediting God in his documentaries on the natural world.

Talking about creationism being taught alongside evolution as an alternative idea, he told the Radio Times magazine: "It's like saying that two and two equals four, but if you wish to believe it, it could also be five ... Evolution is not a theory; it is a fact, every bit as much as the historical fact William the Conqueror landed in 1066."

• Charles Darwin and the Tree of Life, BBC1, 9pm tonight.

A national inquiry has revealed that one in 15 young people in the UK are currently self-harming. Jacky Levy from Kent organisation Depaul UK speaks to MARIJKE COX about a new online service designed to help sufferers.

Opening our eyes to a harmful problem

FIVE years ago staff at Depaul UK in Gravesend opened their doors to a young girl who had problems with self-harming.

The 16-year-old, who had suffered years of abuse and spent time in care, always made sure her body was covered to hide the brutal scars she had caused over the years.

Volunteers and staff at the hostel, which cares for homeless young people, worked closely with the teenager and just two years later she walked out wearing a sleeveless top and skirt, unafraid to show off her body. She is now in a stable relationship and has a son.

Jacky Levy, project manager at the hostel, said this success story is one of many out of the hundreds of young people they have cared for over the years.

She said: "We help those aged between 16 to 21, from all walks of life and with diverse problems. We give them space and develop relationships. One of the major things we do is bring humour into their lives."

Ms Levy, who joined the Gravesend branch of Depaul UK six years ago, said self-harm is a common occurrence with their residents.

"Sometimes they keep it a secret, sometimes they tell us, but one of the things we must do is make sure they harm in a safe way. If we are aware then we can make sure they don't use dirty knives and razors as well as working towards helping them stop."

"Some are so damaged they don't feel emotion and they do it as a way to remind themselves they exist. It makes them feel alive somehow – it's very sad."

One of their residents is Diane. She came to one of the hostels aged 18 after leaving her family and ending up homeless.

She would frequently self-harm, but after the organisation put her in touch with the Children and Adolescent Mental Health Service, they helped her build her confidence and get a voluntary placement at a local vet.

Although Diane is unable to live independently, she has reduced her self-harming and they have organised a specialist home for her.

Ms Levy said: "Everyone we have helped has kept in contact with us. They really start to open up and we develop relationships which makes them realise they are liked. One of the problems is they think they are not. We have a high success rate."

As part of their work, Depaul UK has teamed up with youth mental health charity 42nd Street and online communications charity YouthNet, to provide an online service to help those who self-harm.

A national inquiry found one in 15 young people in the UK are currently self-harming and despite it previously being a taboo subject, more and more people want help.

Fiona Dawe, chief executive of YouthNet, said: "Never before has there been such a comprehensive offering of self-harm advice and information, combined with peer-to-peer support, available online."

"By working with people affected, we have been able to create fantastic visual, audio and written content which is interesting and inclusive – allowing us to get help for people how they want it, when they need it."

Drums instrumental for a healthy lifestyle

Percussion helps to boost fitness

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

DRUMS and cymbals will replace weights and treadmills at a special workshop promoting healthy living through music.

Experts at the Sidney De Haan research centre in Folkestone believe certain parts of the rock 'n' roll lifestyle – namely the constant movement involved with playing percussion instruments – can help the body recover from injury and illness.

Musician Simon Lee works with a large number of health groups throughout the county, and will lead a drumming workshop at the centre on Tuesday (February 3).

He said: "Western science has begun to look at activities that promote wellbeing and to assess their value to modern healthcare.

"A new interest has developed in drumming, rhythm-making and the role it has in healthy communities, and there is strong evidence to suggest it may actually be a healing activity.

"Some have gone so far as to prove

CAN'T BEAT IT: Drumming workshop aims to promote a healthy lifestyle that time spent drumming can positively affect our immune systems, levels of stress and psychological well-being.

"Hand-drumming circles, which originated on the festival scene and in community art groups, have become increasingly popular in the UK. Now drummers are being offered the chance to work in specialised health and social care settings."

The message behind Mr Lee's workshop is ironic because some of history's most talented drummers – such as Led Zeppelin's John Bonham and The Who's Keith Moon – lived extremely unhealthy lifestyles and died young as a result.

However, their downfall was more due to the pressures of fame and wealth, whereas Mr Lee has demonstrated in his work with mental health groups, recovering drug addicts and people with autism that percussion can benefit the body in a variety of ways.

Recently Mr Lee, who can also play the guitar and sing, has lent his expertise to the Trevor Gibbens mental health unit in Maidstone as well as Medway Primary Care Trust. He also leads team building workshops.

Mr Lee said: "Drumming can energise or relax. It can foster a sense of playfulness or release anger and tension and also help in the conquering of social isolation and the building of positive relationships."

The Sidney De Haan Research Centre for Arts and Health is part of Canterbury Christ Church University, and is situated at the University Centre Folkestone.

Its primary aim is to promote the value of music and the arts for the wellbeing and health of individuals and communities.

• The workshop, which is free of charge, runs from 1pm-3pm. To book a place call Isobel Salisbury on 01303 220870.

Sprinting PC halted drunk driver in car

A DRUNK man drove so slowly along Herne Bay High Street that a sprinting policeman was able to grab his keys from the ignition.

Officers had seen David Callan, 42, stagger across Bank Street and get into his green Micra Car.

Canterbury Magistrates Court heard how the car weaved down the High Street. They got behind it but Mr Callan failed to stop.

Road side readings showed he was over two and a half times the legal limit.

John Patty, defending, said his client hit the bottle because his ten year marriage had broken up.

He said instead of walking the mile to his home in Holmscroft Road the postman drove because he didn't want to be late starting his rounds.

Callan, 42, was given 80 hours unpaid work, banned for two years and ordered to pay £60 costs.

Fixed yellow cameras are there because 3 or more people have been killed or seriously injured in speed-related crashes.

Hospitals review

EXPERTS on changes to NHS services have visited the sites of controversial shake-up plans to hospitals.

Health Secretary Alan Johnson asked the Independent Reconfiguration Panel (IRP) to review the proposals, which would include axing A&E and four other units including maternity at Queen Mary's Hospital Sidcup (QMS), after local councillors refused them.

The IRP will be visiting the area to view the facilities and meet patients, clinicians and other staff at the hospital sites.

The proposals, which affect QMS and three London hospitals have been met with tough opposition.

The NHS faced criticism for a flawed consultation process and for basing the changes on finance over patients.

If you want to take part in the review call 0207 3898055 or email info@irpanel.org.uk.

A PLACEMENT project that helps people with disabilities to live more independently is urging people to come forward to make-up for a shortage of carers.

The scheme, run by Kent County Council, has been described as "fostering for adults" and was re-launched at an event this week in the hope more people will volunteer their spare time and open their homes to people who need support.

"They're my best friends," said Denise Edge who has been living with Ian Longley and his family for around three years.

The 44-year-old, who has learning difficulties, was left with no one to care for her when her mother died and social services were ready to move her into a care home.

Mr Longley said: "I've got a small annex, which was empty after my daughter went to university. I was thinking how to use it and social services told me about the scheme."

After going through various checks and the application process, Mr Longley received a phone call saying that Ms Edge needed somewhere to stay and so they met and hit it off.

"Denise has control over her own life now, she shops on her own, which she never did before and that is a really big thing," he said.

He added that although Ms Edge had decided independent living was not for her, what had started as a three-week placement had turned into a permanent arrangement everyone was happy with.

Mr Longley continued: "If you are even slightly interested pick up the phone because it is such a positive thing to do.

"It is so useful because as parents get old their [disabled] children are suddenly left with nowhere to live. We desperately need more people to come on board. You just need to be caring and have common sense."

Claire Hunter, who works to recruit carers to the scheme, which has been running for nearly 20 years, added: "It is basically fostering for adults. It is for people with physical and learning disabilities and older people."

"It is about helping them develop skills such as washing and cooking and can help people move into independent living."

Cllr Graham Gibbens, KCC's cabinet member for adult social services, added: "Individuals can have a greater and more fulfilled life by living in people's homes and being part of a family."

"A lot of the carers themselves find it a fulfilling experience to help someone move on in their lives and become more independent. When you find the right mix of individual and carer it can be a very valuable system."

IT may just look like a regular, old-fashioned, shop window. But this is in fact a globe-trotting piece of one Kent town's heritage.

And after a remarkable trip across the Atlantic, it is now back and proving a big attraction at Faversham's museum.

The shop front of 4 Market Place, dates from the 1840s when it was the window into a popular confectionary store.

But in 1932 it was broken into bits and sold by an antiques dealer.

Incredibly, it had been snapped up by an entrepreneur who planned to show it off as an example of "a typical European shop façade" at a museum in Chicago where it became quite a popular attraction.

But in recent years the store front was taken off display and the owners of the museum eventually decided to sell it.

Museum chiefs contacted the New York branch of auctioneers Sotheby's who agreed to act on their behalf.

But in the meantime, they had also made contact with members of staff at the Faversham museum in Preston Street, who said they would like it back.

So the auctioneers donated it to the town – and even picked up the shipping fee as well.

Now the window, with a series of notice boards telling the unusual story, is open to the public as part of the museum.

The display also recounts the businesses that occupied the address of 4 Market Place. It currently houses a Chinese restaurant.

Other attractions in the museum include recreations of shop interiors and a school-room, a display of wartime memorabilia and sporting equipment and trophies.

Historian Arthur Percival said: "Faversham has an extremely fascinating history,

Sweet return for shop front especially for a town of its size. In Elizabethan times William Shakespeare came to visit and one of the town's residents became a pirate who terrorised the Mediterranean before converting to Islam.

"Then there are the gunpowder works and railway as well as a lot of wartime activity."

The museum is offering a special deal for half term from Monday to Friday, February 16-20. There will be no charge for children during half term week but tickets for adults are £2 and for Senior citizens £1. The museum and gallery are open from 10am to 4pm, with last entry at 3pm.

Double trouble for cannabis brothers

IDENTICAL twins Craig and Bradley Horne are in the double trouble after they were caught growing cannabis.

Police caught the aroma of the drug when they made a routine call to the twins' home in Milbourne Grove, Sittingbourne, on October 29 last year.

As a result the pair, aged 22, were charged with growing 20 cannabis plants in an upstairs room.

Margharita Mitchell, prosecuting, said Craig tried to make a run for it out of the back door but was grabbed by an officer.

Bradley took them upstairs and they discovered the tell-tale silver papered windows, fertiliser and chemicals used to grow the plants.

The pair pleaded guilty saying they were growing it for personal use.

Magistrates adjourned the case until February 16 for probation reports.

Server seized as judge threatened on news website

A GLOBAL news website has been targeted by Kent Police after the personal details of a crown court judge appeared online.

Indymedia, which promotes "radical, accurate and passionate tellings of truth", had one of its computer servers seized when users posted Judge Neil Butterfield's address and phone number along with a death threat.

The information appeared below an article on the Kent Police-led Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty (SHAC) investigation, which resulted in seven animal rights extremists sentenced to a total of 50 years in prison.

EXTREMIST: Daniel Wadham was one of the people sentenced by Judge Butterfield

Judge Butterfield was the man who decided on the punishments for the SHAC members, who intimidated companies associated with Cambridge-shire-based Huntingdon Life Sciences. One of those jailed was Daniel Wadham, 21, from Bromley, who received a five-year sentence.

A statement by Indymedia read: "The raid in which the server was seized is an attack on free speech and independent journalism in the UK, and especially on the grassroots, open-publishing platform that is Indymedia. The loss of a server represents serious damage to the Indymedia infrastructure in the UK."

Officers seized the equipment last Thursday from the Manchester-based internet service provider UK Grid.

According to Indymedia, police asked the site's volunteers to retain data about the person who posted Judge Butterfield's personal details. However, the group said that as an "open publishing project", it did not keep logs of the server activity.

While Indymedia users lamented their "loss of free speech" on the site's forums, others in the online community were more supportive of the decision to seize the server.

One post on another open-publishing site, Slashdot, read: "The SHAC protestors broke the law and are now rightly in jail. The person who posted the judge's personal information and a death threat also broke the law."

"If someone a forum posted information on where to find Barack Obama, and a death threat, would you expect that to be seized?"

A Kent Police spokesman confirmed it had seized computer equipment from a company in Manchester, adding: "The firm is being fully co-operative as we continue to investigate."

Young journalists reach for the Sky

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kentmedia.co.uk

JOURNALISM students at a university are set to benefit from a new annual scholarship in the name of legendary broadcaster Bob Friend.

Sky News chose the multimedia journalism degree offered at the University of Kent ahead of several universities around the country offering courses for budding reporters.

The winning student will have their first year's tuition fees paid as well as a four-week work placement at Sky News.

Mr Friend, a presenter on the 24-hour news channel from its launch in 1989 to his retirement in 2003, died aged 70 after suffering from a brain tumour in October last year.

John Ryley, the head of Sky News who will be presenting the new award on Friday, February 6, said: "Bob Friend was the origiwith anchorman memorial scholarship

LEARNING EXPERIENCE: Sky News has set up a scholarship in memory of 'the face of the channel' Bob Friend, left, to benefit journalism students at the University of Kent nal face of Sky News, a fantastic journalist and a much-loved friend of his many colleagues at Sky News, the BBC and beyond.

"We are delighted to be able to announce this award in his honour – and are sure Bob would be proud to be helping young journalists get a foot up into the profession he was absolutely passionate about."

Mr Ryley will also give an inaugural Sky Bob Friend memorial lecture at the university's Medway campus.

Professor Tim Luckhurst, head of the journalism degree programme and a former editor of The Scotsman, began his career working for BBC Radio 4's Today programme.

He said: "I did not know Bob Friend when I was at the BBC, as I joined he left. But I was a big fan of the stuff he did for Sky News and listening back to the stories he covered for the BBC it was clear what a brilliant and creative journalist he was."

"He could do colour, whimsical and funny just as well as authoritative and serious."

Mr Friend, who was born in Rusthall near Tunbridge Wells, was also well-known for his great sense of humour.

He became a journalist at the age of 15 on the Tunbridge Wells Advertiser, having left the local grammar school, Skinners', with no qualifications. After national service he set up the West Kent News Agency before joining the BBC in 1967.

He was the BBC's first staff correspondent in Australia, worked for BBC Tokyo and in New York before joining the Sky News team.

His style was popular with audiences and he also impressed A-lister Tom Cruise, who gave him a cameo role in the film Mission Impossible. He also played himself in the blockbuster Independence Day.

Prof Luckhurst said his students were busy preparing their scholarship entries.

"They have to devise a schedule for a day of programming on a news channel combining TV, on-line and radio content," he said. "They have got to come up with a story that is plausible and justifies that sort of coverage."

The students also have to sit a news exam prepared by Sky News, based on the events of the last few weeks.

"We are not a media studies course," Prof Luckhurst added. "I'm preparing real journalists to work for real national networks."

Rob Kirk, editorial development manager at Sky, said: "We chose Kent because Bob was a man of Kent and we thought it appropriate a local university should be the beneficiary."

"We were also aware that it is a new course at Kent and we thought that was appropriate because Sky believes in innovation and development so it seemed like a marriage made in heaven."

"It is very important for us to stress that we live in a multi-platform age of TV, radio and online and we were impressed by what they are doing at Kent."

Speak out over Gateway plans

HUNDREDS are expected to turn up at a Kent County Council meeting to have their say on Kent International Gateway.

If KIG goes ahead a 275-acre road-rail freight interchange will be built in the Kent countryside near to the M20 junction eight at Bearsted and Hollingbourne.

Additional information has been added to the proposal, which has been opened for public comment.

KCC are urging people to come to the meeting on Monday at 7pm at Invicta Grammar School to share their views on the proposed freight depot.

This will be the last chance to speak out before Maidstone council's planning deadline on Friday, February 6.

Nephew's new book about 'bouncing bomb' pilot salutes Dambusters hero

TOP FLIGHT: Sqn Ldr Maltby is introduced to King George VI after the raids

By IAN READ
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IN A quiet corner of Kent lies a man who played a crucial part in the Dambusters raid.

Squadron Leader David Maltby DSO, DFC dropped the bouncing bomb which unleashed a deluge – but he is the forgotten Dambuster. The bomb released from his Lancaster caused the breach in the Mohne Dam in Germany which opened the floodgates.

Yet four months later the quietly-spoken pilot was killed in a mid-air collision over the North Sea.

His was the only body recovered from the grey waters. No trace was ever found of the rest of his crew.

The fate of the young pilot and his comrades would have remained one of the many mysteries of World War Two but for his nephew, Charles Foster.

Mr Foster never knew his heroic uncle, but amid rumours of a new Dambusters film, he decided to research David Maltby's story.

The result is his book Breaking The Dams, which is a detailed biography of the young pilot and his men.

Mr Foster didn't realise the part his uncle had played in the raids until he saw The Dam Busters at the movies in 1961.

The young Mr Foster had read Paul Brickhill's book about the raid, but didn't realise the full extent of his uncle's role until he saw George Baker's on-screen performance as David Maltby.

Mr Foster said: "In the cinema that day a prickle of recognition ran down the back of my neck, a feeling I've had countless times since."

'Quiet man' who broke first dam of famous raid

"The pilot of the plane that broke the dam, David Maltby, was my uncle, the only brother of my aunt Audrey and my mother Jean."

Mr Foster has grown up with the mystique of the Dambusters.

He said: "People's perception of the raid comes from the film, but The Dam Busters deviates from the true story because the bouncing bomb was still on the secret list when it was made in 1955."

It's ironic, because the Germans had an intact example on the day of the raid from one of the crashed aircraft, but were unable to figure out how it worked."

Mr Foster marvels at the skill and bravery of men such as his uncle who nightly flew in the face of almost certain death.

At the time of the raid, 23-year-old Sq Ldr Maltby already had a full tour of operations behind him. He was one of the RAF's top bomber pilots, which is why he was selected.

He was in the first wave of Lancasters hedge-hopping their way across Holland and Germany on that May night in 1943.

But for all his flying skill, he was to die just months later when his plane collided with a Mosquito light bomber in cloud over the North Sea.

He'd been married for 16 months and left a 10-week-old baby son, John.

Mr Foster spoke to the dwindling group of wartime fliers who knew his uncle.

He said: "They described him as tall and quiet, but with a sense of authority. They were very comfortable with him – he was a good pilot."

He'd never been very good at school or made his mark, but when the war came he found something he was good at.

"If he had survived he would have reached high rank in the Air Force."

When he landed after the famous raid, Sqn Ldr Maltby and his crew celebrated –

DAM AND BLAST: The Mohne after the attack by Sqn Ldr Maltby's Lancaster

but their joy at surviving was tempered by the sobering realisation that the crews of eight Lancasters wouldn't be coming back.

He'd seen at least three of his friends shot down. Shortly afterwards he was promoted to Flight Commander.

Mr Foster was able to discover another side to his uncle, through the man who played him in The Dam Busters.

He said: "I heard George Baker being interviewed and he said David used to shoot at plates with his service revolver to let off steam."

"George was also disconcerted to find Charles Whitworth, the CO at Scampton at the time of the raid and advisor on the film, kept referring to him as 'Dave'. He found that very spooky."

David Maltby was buried in the quiet country churchyard at Wickhambreaux, near Canterbury – the same village church in which he had been married.

Borough pride at clean streets

SWALE has some of the cleanest streets in the UK, according to an independent examiner.

The north Kent borough has one of the top performing councils in the country for street cleaning after receiving a 99 per cent pass rate in a cleanliness survey.

This study was carried out by Government-appointed inspectors as part of a National Indicator project which monitors conditions in towns and villages.

After receiving a five per cent failure rate – which was within the Government's satisfactory rate of 25 per cent – from April to July last year, the council managed to reduce the failure rate to just one per cent from August through to November. Street scene officers and street wardens have been working hard to tackle litter, graffiti and fly-posting.

Between April and November 2008, wardens issued 58 fixed penalty notices to those caught littering Swale's roads and paths.

Residents can call and register concerns about a road or area they feel is not being maintained to an acceptable standard, say council officers. This helps them focus on the areas that need particular help.

Cleansing services manager Alan Turner said: "We are proud of the results of this survey."

To report a litter problem in Swale, call 01795 417850.

M-way patrol cuts story angers police

KENT Police have denied reports they are to pull routine traffic patrols from the county's motorways.

The force angrily dismissed a story on a local news website which claimed the roads were now safe enough to be policed less frequently, pointing out that it was in fact expanding its safety drive.

Editors of the site in question – which is not associated with KOS Media – were asked to either remove or correct the article earlier this week.

The number of people killed or seriously injured on Kent's high-ways has fallen steadily during the last five years, from 1,321 in 2002 to 802 in 2007.

Police want this downward trend to continue and are increasing the number of patrols on roads where most accidents are occurring.

Dr Guy Rollinson, manager of the roads policing intelligence unit, said: "We have a legal responsibility

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

to work towards a target of reducing the number of people killed and injured in road traffic collisions by 40 per cent by December 2010.

"We have virtually reached that target three years ahead of schedule with 39.9 per cent.

"I attribute this to a concerted push by Kent Police and all those who work hard to keep people safe on the roads. Their dedication is extraordinary. We want people to go about their daily business uninterrupted and drive home safely to their families."

Kent Police have been able to increase the number of patrols due to extra resources such as a second motorcycle team that was introduced in 2007.

High-speed main roads and dangerous rural routes are two areas likely to see an increased police presence. Ch Insp Roscoe Walford, head of the roads policing unit, explained the reasons behind the expansion: "We have used an intelligence-based approach to get the best use from our highly-skilled traffic resources towards the roads most in need for years," he said.

"Because our motorways are relatively safe, intelligence is telling us we now need to increase the number and type of roads we routinely patrol in order to further reduce collisions and casualties."

The extended safety drive will also see officers target those motorists deemed most at risk, including young males and motorcyclists.

They will also be keeping their eyes peeled for "high-risk behaviour" such as dangerous driving, speeding, drink driving, people speaking on mobile telephones without hands-free kits and those not wearing seatbelts.

Club's own goal with memorial silence to living legend Tommy

THE former club of a leading player from amateur football's golden era has apologised for holding a minute's silence in his honour – because he isn't dead, writes Jon Coates.

Tommy Farrer, 86, was still alive and kicking at his home in Maidstone, but that didn't stop County Durham side Bishop Auckland mistakenly paying their respects. About 2,000 fans solemnly bowed their heads in silence before a non-league match.

A tribute appeared in the North East town's local newspaper and the match programme stated: "We have just learned of the death of Two Blues legend Tommy Farrer. Our thoughts go to his family and friends."

But 287 miles away at his home in Maidstone, Mr Farrer had just celebrated his 65th wedding anniversary with wife Gladys.

Mr Farrer, who also won eight amateur international caps for England, told the Northern Echo: "We are not upset, but we did think it was a bit of a joke at first."

"Whoever it was who told people I had died contacted the club and they decided to go the whole hog by arranging the silence. I'm very moved they went to such trouble."

Wife Gladys, 87, said: "We're very sorry people have had all this hassle."

The club realised their mistake when chairman Terry Jackson rang Mrs Farrer to offer his condolences, only to be told Tommy had just popped out to get a paper.

After hearing of her husband's demise, a baffled Mrs Farrer told the chairman that if he cared to hang on for a minute, he could tell Mr Farrer himself, as he would soon be back from the shops.

Mr Farrer played for Bishop Auckland, who are now in the Northern League Division One, between 1945 and 1953, when the side were regarded as the best amateur team of their generation.

Mr Jackson said: "It was the first – and hopefully last – time this has happened. It was done with the best intentions."

"When anyone involved with the club passes away, we try to make sure there is some kind of remembrance."

"The news came via Bishop Auckland Social Club and we took it very seriously. But we had not been told the right information. We were keen to pay tribute and were victims of our own efficiency."

"We are glad to hear that Tommy is still with us and hope he remains in good health for many years."

Police probe bloody online fight viewed by thousands

EXCLUSIVE

By SIMON ROBINSON

SHOCKING footage of an illegal bare-knuckle brawl between two shirtless fighters in Kent has been posted online.

And within hours of our sister paper Yourmedway breaking the story on Wednesday, the violent five-minute brawl was removed from the YouTube website.

But police launched an investigation after rumours that more fights were planned.

The brutal footage shows the two men exchanging dozens of heavy blows, watched by a baying mob.

The 'Bill Wright and Charlie Rumble' video, was posted on Sunday, January 18, and had attracted 5,000 viewings.

A second, longer video of the same fight had been watched more than 3,000 times.

Yourmedway contacted the police, who said they were aware of the clips and had opened an investigation. The daylight fight takes place at Barnfield, near Chatham Golf

FIGHT CLUB: Scenes from the bare-knuckle fight in Chatham that was posted on YouTube

Centre and the Coney Banks playing fields.

More than 50 onlookers circle the fighters as they square off, screaming encouragement as the fists begin to fly.

After a few minutes the taller fighter, wearing grey tracksuit bottoms and black trainers, lands a number of heavy punches, leaving his opponent with blood pouring down his cheek.

The man in grey also connects with a powerful right kick, sending the other man sprawling.

However, after four more minutes of brawling the tall fighter eventually gives in, raising his hand as the shorter fighter comes towards him.

The men shake hands before turning to walk away. More than 20 YouTube members had posted messages underneath the clip.

One viewer wrote: "Good fight from both, but Bill gave up so Charlie won, end of."

Another added: "Apparently the reason Bill gave up is because he had blood in his mouth and couldn't breathe - another one for Wayfield anyway. Good fight, hoping for another."

Det Ch Insp Dominic Kilbride said: "Violence of any sort is unacceptable but what is also concerning about this is the people involved clearly do not realise there is risk of serious or fatal injury attached to bare-knuckle fighting."

"An investigation has begun and if anyone has information they can contact officers on 01634 792123, or Crimestoppers on 0800 555111."

Some people had wrongly suggested that Medway-based boxing coach Charlie Rumble, who has trained hopefuls at gyms across Kent, was one of the fighters.

KOS Media contacted Mr Rumble, who explained it was not him.

He said: "It's definitely not me. I'm 55 years old, why would I get involved in that?"

His wife has also contacted our offices to make it quite clear that it is not her husband in the clip.

The YouTube video has been removed from the website.

• A 19-year-old Chatham man was arrested on Wednesday in connection with the fight. He has been released on bail until March 3.

Improving travelling in Kent

Your one-stop guide to information and advice on travelling

Going wild by the roadside

Kent's roadside verges may not be an obvious place to find wildlife, but did you know that they actually support and house a significant part of the county's threatened habitats and wildlife? The wildlife you can find ranges from rare wild orchids to threatened reptiles such as adders.

That's why the Kent Road Verge Project was set up in 1994. The project is Kent Highway Services working with Kent Wildlife Trust to identify, protect and maintain roadside nature reserves. A Road Verge Officer works with volunteers to look after 130 roadside nature reserves across the county, which total 55 miles of wildlife habitat.

These roadside reserve areas range from ancient woodland to chalk grassland and heathland. Some are home to various species of wild orchid such as the Greater Butterfly Orchid and others are home to mammals including badgers and dormice. The reserves serve as a corridor for other wildlife too, so they can move about safely.

You can identify these reserves by a blue butterfly sign at the side of the road. The Bluebell Hill reserve supports eight different types of orchid, which attract a variety of insects. The Adonis Blue Butterfly was recorded on the site for the first time in 2007 and common lizards are also known to frequent the site. There is also a unique project at Lydden Hill Roadside Nature Reserves where areas of scrub have been cleared and cattle are grazing the land.

Look out for the butterfly signs next time you're travelling in Kent - wildlife could be closer than you think!

Assessing the impact

At a time when a lot of construction work is slowing down, Kent Highway Services is still delivering its service, including the planning and preparation of improvement schemes and major projects.

Even if you can't see works happening on the ground, the preparation process is still going on. Most major schemes take some time from planning to actual construction on site and a large part of the background work is the Environmental Impact Assessment.

The assessment means that planners have all the relevant information before a project is put forward for approval and any adverse impacts of the scheme can be dealt with at the design stage.

We have to look at the impacts of any major schemes on natural resources such as water, wildlife and the landscape. At the design stage, we may need to include pollution prevention systems, provision of new wildlife habitat and landscape planting as part of new schemes. That way, we can make sure that new schemes to benefit Kent residents do as little as damage as possible to Kent's environment.

You can find out more about the way we work online at www.kent.gov.uk/highways

Bringing in the auditors to keep Kent safe!

A road safety audit doesn't sound very exciting, but it plays a major role in any design improvement works being carried out on the county's roads.

Road safety audits are part of road safety engineering. They use a mixture of knowledge about road user behaviour, vehicles, weather and lighting conditions and the highway design to make sure that any changes to the road layout improve safety as much as possible.

These audits are carried out throughout the planning and design process, to take account of any changes or developments along the way.

An audit is first carried out at the outline design stage, then at the detailed design stage and once a scheme has been put in place, we check it again before anyone uses it. We also go back once the new layout is being used to identify any issues and make changes where necessary.

Your feedback is important to the audit process too. If you're using a new layout on one of Kent's roads and want to give us feedback, you can contact us on 08458 247 800.

Book dispels bishop's 'segregation' view

THE Bishop of Rochester has refused to comment on an accusation he is "promoting racial segregation".

The claim comes from researchers at a Manchester university who say race relations in Britain are under threat from a series of ill-informed myths.

Using previously unpublished evidence, Professor Ludi Simpson and Dr Nissa Finney show how repeated falsehoods about immigration, integration and segregation are misleading policy and promoting racial disharmony.

By CHRIS MURPHY

After years of investigation the pair say in their book, Sleepwalking to Segregation? Challenging Myths about Race and Migration, they found no evidence "whatsoever" for the existence of race ghettos in the UK.

In fact, they say the opposite is true, with increasing ethnic mixing. And claims by head of equalities watchdog Trevor Phillips that Britain is "sleepwalking" into racial and religious segregation are also dismissed in the book.

According to the academics' review of evidence, 'white flight' – where the white population leaves increasingly multi-ethnic towns and cities – is no greater than brown or black flight.

The authors also provide evidence that areas with large populations of Muslims do not act as a breeding ground for terrorism.

Prof Simpson said: "By propagating myths using alarmist interpretations of population change, individuals such as Trevor Phillips, Dr Michael Nazir-Ali, Bishop of Rochester and Sir Andrew Green, chair of Migration Watch are inadvertently promoting racial segregation."

Misunderstanding breeds mistrust and division between ethnic and religious groups.

"This book is about dispelling those myths."

A year ago Dr Nazir-Ali, Britain's only Asian bishop, said Islamic extremists had created no-go areas in Britain where it was too dangerous for non-Muslims to enter.

He said people of a different races and faiths faced physical attack if they lived or worked in communities dominated by a strict Muslim ideology.

He told The Times newspaper: "Everyone agrees that multiculturalism has had disastrous consequences, and that segregation and extremism have arisen from this."

Dr Finney added: "The only concentrations which resemble anything like ghettos are of white people. The average white person lives in an area which has more than 94 per cent white people in it."

"In almost every city with a sizeable immigrant settlement area, children of immigrants have on balance moved away from those areas not to them or between them."

A spokesman for the bishop said: "I don't think we have anything to add at this stage."

Awards night for greenest firms

KENT companies that want to shout about their environmental credentials are being urged to enter the Environment Awards for Kent Business 2009.

As well as highlighting environmental work the awards also reward companies that have had a positive impact in the community.

During their 21-year history the awards have drawn entries from hundreds of organisations of all sizes from many sectors.

Keith Ferrin, Kent County Council's cabinet member for environment, highways and waste, said: "With the economic downturn, it is even more important at this time to share best practice and applaud environmental systems which are of benefit to all."

This year the black-tie awards ceremony, which will be held at Port Lympne Wild Animal Park, near Hythe, on September 24, will recognise the top five entries as well as the Kent Environment Business of the Year 2009.

The current holder of the title is Stone Circle Livery of Woodchurch, near Ashford, which was the UK's first and only fully organic horse livery yard. The family-owned business was recognised for careful land management and work creating new habitat and woodland, restoring ponds and recreating wildflower meadows not widely seen in Britain since medieval times.

Energy company EON has become a sponsor for the first time. Other sponsors are Kent County Council, Business Link and the Environment Agency.

Entries must be submitted before April 30. Details are available by calling 01622 221859 or by logging on to www.kent.gov.uk/environmentawards.

Give a gift of IT

A CHARITY in Kent has urged people to donate their unwanted PCs, laptops, notebooks and monitors to students in Africa.

Computers 4 Africa, based in Maidstone, said the continent had the lowest rate of PC ownership per capita in the world. The charity is holding a collection in Tunbridge Wells next weekend so people drop off unwanted computers and other hardware.

A spokesman said: "Only the wealthiest have access to IT equipment and training. The donation of your PC will help reverse this, so as many African students as possible will have access to IT equipment."

You can drop off computer equipment at the Ex Mazda Unit, Longfield Road, Tunbridge Wells on February 6 and 7 from 9am to 5pm.

For more about the charity visit www.computers4africa.org.uk or call 0845 2008510.

Different class is good for our mental health

THE CONTROVERSIAL reclassification of cannabis to a class B substance has been welcomed by a couple from Kent with first hand knowledge of the devastating mental illness it can cause.

Jacqui Smith, the Home Secretary,

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

announced plans last summer to impose tougher penalties on the drug because of research linking its use to schizophrenia and other mental health disorders.

New laws reclassifying cannabis as a class B drug from its previous class C status came into force this week and it now carries a maximum prison sentence for possession of five years.

Coordinators for a Kent branch of the national mental health charity Rethink, Stephen and Liz Wood, told how their son, now in his 30s, developed schizophrenia after regularly smoking cannabis.

"We feel the reclassification is justified," Mr Wood said. "It gives the right message. The tragedy of mental illness cannot be emphasised enough."

In the 1971 Misuse of Drugs Act cannabis was graded B, the same as amphetamines, but in 2004 the then home secretary David Blunkett downgraded it to class C, the lowest classification.

The harm done by cannabis was thought to be less than other class B drugs and the aim was to free police officers to concentrate on more serious drugs.

But Ms Smith said the 2004 decision would be reversed, despite the recommendations of the independent Advisory

SKUNK: Police seizures of cannabis are increasingly of the super-strength strains Council on the Misuse of Drugs (ACMD).

Mr Wood said: "From experience we have no doubt cannabis can cause mental illness. However there are degrees of susceptibility."

He said although few people in the total population are affected by this it still impacted on stretched mental health services.

Experts say that between 8 and 13 per cent of schizophrenia cases are linked to cannabis use. In the UK, one per cent of the population, 600,000 people, have schizophrenia, which means up to 78,000 people have the illness due to smoking cannabis.

A 2007 review of research into the the drug and mental illness in The Lancet medical journal found frequency of use increases the risk of psychotic illness by up to 40 per cent.

WIND FARM NEWS REGARDING A256

Last November Vattenfall bought the Thanet Wind Farm project and now the visible construction work begins. When complete in 2010 the wind farm will generate enough green energy for 240,000 homes and Thanet will boast the largest wind farm in the world.

On 6th February the installation of the onshore cables along the A256 will start. This is one of the first exciting steps towards receiving energy from the offshore turbines. There were trials of the traffic management scheme on the A256 last year. After consultation with Kent Highway Services, Thanet District Council and Dover District Council it was decided that it would be best for the work to be carried out 24 hours a day over weekends only. It will begin at 19:00 (7:00pm) on Friday evenings with each section of work being completed by 06:00 (6:00am) on Monday mornings. The work will begin near the former Richborough Power Station and finish at Pegwell Bay in November.

This is an exciting development for the local area. Vattenfall is the fifth largest energy producer in Europe and one of the biggest wind power operators in Britain. The total investment for completing the wind farm is in the order of £780 million. Vattenfall apologises for any inconvenience the road works may cause. A new web site will be launched in the next few days that will give information about the wind farm and include regular updates on the progress of its construction. Information for the local road users will also be included. The address is www.vattenfall.com/thanetwind.

Showground plans alarm CPRE amid society ballot

KENT'S branch of the UK's biggest countryside protection body is "very concerned" about plans for the County Showground at Detling which have sparked a leadership contest.

Kent Agricultural Society members are voting on whether chairman George Jessel, who supports at least some expansion, or former vice-chair Malcolm Chamberlain should lead.

But Dr Hilary Newport, director of the Kent branch of the Campaign to Protect Rural England, said: "We would be very concerned if it meant commercial development to pay for improvements."

Protected

"We cannot justify it in an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. We wish them success for the future, but not at the expense of our protected landscape."

Opponents of the plans – which range from a £6 million building revamp to a £27 million exhibition centre and equestrian complex – say they are too ambitious. Mr Jessel said the site was losing potential business "due to our quality of events buildings and our facilities".

The County Show lost £300,000 in 2008. The result of the leadership ballot will be announced on Friday.

My crocodile tears were a real pain

EVERY time Patricia Webster ate a meal she would be crying her eyes out, but now she has been cured of the syndrome called crocodile tears, writes Chris Murphy.

Mrs Webster said it was caused by a rare disease but has now been cured using botox jabs.

At her home in Chatham, the 58-year-old said: "I do feel a little guilty about getting these injections. I don't want people to think they are a waste of money or that I am being vain. I was in terrible pain, and thanks to these injections I can live a more normal life."

She has the injections directly into the lacrimal gland under her eyelids – enough to make anyone's eyes water.

Mrs Webster, a mother-of-three, said: "It sounds more awful than it is. The treatment at Maidstone Hospital has given me a new lease of life, away from the discomfort of shedding tears all the time. And I can wear make up again – which is nice."

FRESH OUTLOOK: Botox has cured Patricia Webster's 'crocodile tears' and given her a new lease of life

About 60 patients attend botox clinics at Maidstone and Pembury hospitals. She said: "I was diagnosed with a life-threatening condition called Guillain-Barré syndrome in 1991.

"It affects the nerves and in turn that caused my eyes to water whenever I had anything to eat or drink."

"My crocodile tears, as it is called, developed as a side effect. It really does affect your life – you can't even go out to eat."

A hospital spokesman said: "It is a remarkable treatment for an unusual condition. We are glad it is working out for Mrs Webster."

The injections block signals from nerves to shed tears.

Mrs Webster said: "The alternative was extremely difficult surgery where part of the eyelids are cut. It leaves scars and there is still no guarantee it will work, so I went for the jabs."

Drugs found in pockets after graffiti arrest in city

GRAFFITI vandal Craig Fisher was caught red-handed scrawling on city centre buildings.

When Fisher, 26, of Tile Kiln Hill, Blean, near Canterbury, was arrested police found three wraps of cannabis in his pockets.

Fisher admitted criminal damage and drug possession when he appeared before Canterbury magistrates. Julie Farbrace, prosecuting, said Fisher was seen writing on the outside of the Furley Page building in Hawks Lane.

Police found Fisher in nearby Water Lane, where he dropped a blue marker pen.

Agitated

He was put in a police car but became agitated. He punched the side of the vehicle and tried to get out. Because of his behaviour police searched Fisher and found the drugs in his pockets.

He said: "All right, I've got some green on me."

Defending himself, Fisher told the court: "I'm very stupid. I have no excuse. I was drunk."

Fisher was fined £150 for possession of cannabis and £250 for criminal damage. He must also pay £30 compensation for the three buildings he damaged, £60 costs and £15 victim surcharge.

Motor dealers defy gloom and warn against 'careless talk'

By STEVE LOADER

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A GOVERNMENT minister was pilloried for daring to suggest she could see "green shoots" of recovery, but many Kent motor dealers are similarly upbeat.

Some closures and redundancies notwithstanding, key groups say sales have been robust for weeks, bucking not just the mainstream view of the economy but a traditionally flat time of year for the trade.

Paul Elligate, general sales manager of the SMC group – with Ford sites at Crayford, Sittingbourne and Gravesend – said: "Our position has been helped by Ford launching two excellent small cars [new Fiesta and Ka] at a time when buyers are looking to downsize and cut costs."

SMALL WONDER: Citroën's C1 city car

"We are also able to buy very cheap cars and pass on discounts to customers, which is keeping turnover healthy."

"But it is not so surprising that some people are willing to spend on a car. Mortgages have gone down, food and fuel prices have eased and if you are in secure employment you are probably starting to feel more confident. We are in danger of talking ourselves into a deeper recession when our general sales show things are not so bad."

His confidence was echoed at Wilmoth's Citroën at Park Wood in Maidstone. General sales manager Kelvin Clayton said: "Interest rates are low so there are deals available and savers are spending on cars. Anyone in a secure job with a mortgage that just got cheaper is probably feeling more secure than they have for months. We are selling across the whole range."

"It's an attitude of mind. If we talk about a slump, it will happen if we're not careful."

NEW FIESTA: Boosting Ford outlets

Group general manager at another major Kent Ford dealer, Invicta Motors of Canterbury, Ashford and Thanet, also feared "careless talk" could cost us dear.

Brian Murray said: "October was poor but November was better and December pretty good. We have had a great start to 2009."

This was no blip, he said, but a nationwide upturn in a month when trade valuation 'bible' Glass's Guide reported used car values hardening after months of decline.

"We are part of a 23-strong nationwide dealer group," he said. "They all report stronger trading. People in secure jobs are becoming numb to the dire predictions and loosening the reins."

Robert Hobbs, centre manager at Motorline Toyota in Broad Oak Road, Canterbury, agreed: "We are not finding things as gloomy as portrayed. Toyota has products to meet the times, such as the Prius and new IQ small car. People coming into the showroom are serious about buying and know what they are looking for."

Her dark materials

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

A PROLIFIC crime writer with a past as dark as her plotlines has given an insight into her success and why her subject remains "endlessly interesting".

Anne Perry, whose historical novels have topped bestseller lists in Europe and the USA, will give a talk about her work and how she constructs her intricate plots, at Bexley library next Wednesday.

The author, who lives in Inverness, Scotland, began her career in 1979 with The Cater Street Hangman, featuring Victorian policeman Thomas Pitt. There are now 24 titles in the series, with the most recent book, Buckingham Palace Gardens, published last year.

It is said to be the longest sustained crime series by a living writer and was made into a television show by ITV in 1998.

"I want to examine people under pressure and find out what they do and why," Ms Perry, 70, said.

"Crime is a very good way of doing that because of the way people behave. An old friend said to me a long time ago that courage is grace under pressure."

Born Juliet Hulme in Blackheath, south London, she moved with her family to New Zealand at the age of 13. In 1954, Juliet and her best friend, Pauline Parker, brutally murdered Pauline's mother. The pair were jailed for five years. In an interview with fellow crime writer Ian Rankin, Ms Perry explained how her parents were separating at the time, how her best friend had told her she would commit suicide and how she felt she had "no choice".

She comes across as completely understanding of the horror of what she did and is honest about the struggles of coming to terms with it. In 1994, Lord of the Rings director Peter Jackson made an acclaimed film, Heavenly Creatures, about the murder.

Asked whether her past influenced her decision to write about murder and crime, Ms Perry said: "No, I wrote other things that did not sell. Crime is the most popular genre. I wrote for 20 years without getting anything published. You have to make it believable and stories have to say something that matters. We want to read about people with as many complexities as we have," she said.

"People like the historic detail as well. The emotional impact is important. One of the things I like is that in the pressure of the investigation you discover a lot about yourself and other people. That makes a mystery interesting. That is what a story is about – discovering things you don't know."

She said people being tested and put in extreme circumstances and the way they react to them was "endlessly interesting".

Ms Perry's other series, which began in 1990, features detective William Monk and a nurse called Hester Latterly. It is set 30 years earlier than the Pitt novels.

She said she finds an endless source of inspiration writing about the past, although her decision not to set her books contemporaneously stems also from the fact that they seem to sell well. But the same questions, issues and themes exist now as in the Victorian era.

"Class systems exist in every society," she said. "Things haven't changed much. People mention to me the ability to take control of your own life, to be responsible, as an issue."

"How much do we exercise dominion over other people? We need the approval of our peers, that is a very strong pull."

Asked how she keeps her novels fresh, she said: "You become known for what you do and people expect you to do a certain thing."

"I hope to make them creative and sufficiently different. There are the same social, moral and ethical questions today as then."

"Many social issues still have not been sorted, and moral and ethical questions never do change."

First chapter in Jordan's career

COULD schoolgirl Jordan Clark be the next JK Rowling? Admirers of the 16-year-old certainly seem to think so, with fans across the country lapping up the first chapter of her 97,000-word fantasy novel, Return of the Sun, after excerpts were posted on the internet.

Miss Clark, who is studying for AS-levels in maths, chemistry, biology and Spanish at Simon Langton Girls' Grammar in Canterbury, squeezes her writing in around a heavy school workload.

But she has no plans to stop with just one book. Work is already under way on the follow-up – Daughters of the Moon – in what will eventually become a trilogy aimed at young adults. Miss Clark, who lives in Chartham, said: "Writing Return of the Sun has been one of the most enlightening things I have ever done."

Miss Clark is now seeking a publisher and has submitted the first few chapters to five agents. She has received three rejections so far, but is undaunted.

She has posted the first chapter on her website as a taster and has received many positive comments, both from fellow students and literature fans from as far away as Humberside.

She describes the trilogy as an epic tale of blood, anger and fear, mixed with the mystery of a first love and the power of friendship.

"My dream is for Return of the Sun to be published and to walk into the common room at school and see someone completely absorbed in my book," she said.

The first chapter is available free online at <http://returnofthesun.synthasite.com>.

A SUBBUTEO shrine has been opened to celebrate the county's link with Britain's most iconic football game, writes Steve Knight.

Inventor Peter Adolph lived in Tunbridge Wells for most of his life and at the peak of the hobby's popularity there were seven factories in the spa town employing people to produce its miniature equipment.

A permanent display of memorabilia is now on show in the town's museum, featuring prototypes of the first Subbuteo figures and bases, among other rare items. Much of the collection was donated by Mr Adolph's son Mark, 52, who lives in Tunbridge Wells.

He said: "It's good the game is being recognised in this way and I think it should have been done sooner, because Subbuteo was a big part of a lot of people's childhoods."

"People were crying out for a football game at the time and that's one of the reasons it took off. It was the computer game of its time. There were also so many add-ons you could buy that once you had the initial set, you always wanted more."

Peter Adolph, who died in 1994, was a keen supporter of QPR and came up with the idea for Subbuteo after leaving the RAF at the end of World War Two. He placed an advert in the popular Boy's Own Paper to gauge interest in the game. He began producing it when he returned from a business trip to find £4,000 worth of postal orders.

The game's popularity exploded when England won the World Cup in 1966, leading to Mr Adolph's decision to sell the game to toy giant Waddingtons five years later. Although Subbuteo's star has faded in recent years due to video games and the internet, there are still fanatical players who take part in international tournaments.

Mark said: "I have a lot of original models and memorabilia, but diehard collectors would have a fit because I tend to just throw them all in a box."

"I'm often invited to tournaments and conventions and although I used to be quite handy at the game, most of these people wipe the floor with me."

"I'm very proud that something my dad invented is still held in such high regard."

The Subbuteo display can be seen at Tunbridge Wells Museum and Art Gallery, at the Civic Centre in Mount Pleasant.

Shrine makes perfect pitch for Subbuteo

Borough defends cost of top job recruitment

COUNCIL bosses say nearly £200,000 being spent on recruiting a new chief executive is money well spent – despite the credit crunch.

Swale council's bid to fill the vacancy is under way, with the successful candidate pocketing a £130,000 salary – that's a pound for every person in the borough, which includes the Sheppey, Sittingbourne and Faversham.

In addition there will be performance-related bonuses. A further £30,000 is being paid to specialist recruitment consultancy Solace Enterprises.

Senior Swale councillor Roger Truelove said: "It is a large amount, but we have been told it is the going rate."

"I can see how someone who had lost their job seeing this sum being offered for running what is really a small council might be upset."

"And I can understand people thinking the money would be better spent on services. Residents might also question whether this is the best use of their council tax. But we need a chief executive. We need leadership. Without one we may lose out on investment from Government and the private sector."

The council has been without someone in the top role since the Mark Bilsborough affair finally came to an end last April.

He was appointed in January 2006 and then controversially put on gardening leave in December 2006 amid allegations concerning his conduct. A disciplinary hearing finally ruled in favour of council officers who complained about him and he was dismissed in April 2008. He later withdrew a claim for unfair dismissal. An interim chief executive, Mike Fisher, was then brought in.

The closing date for applications is Friday, February 13, with a shortlist to be drawn up by March 11 and an announcement of the successful candidate on March 26.

The council said the salary "will ensure that the best candidates are attracted to the role and that Swale council recruits an ambitious and engaging individual with a track record of achievement in leadership and management, who will be charged with helping the council to tackle the significant challenges it faces over the next few years".

The escape Handel

By TONY PATEY

tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

GRAND scale, feelgood entertainment is back in vogue as recession-battered people seek escapism – and that's good news for businesses with long-term links with the arts.

Tunbridge Wells-based opera by definition, the county's only resident professional opera company, is staging Europe's premiere of a specially commissioned modern English translation of Handel's rarely staged masterpiece Tamerlano.

And it marks the continuation of a successful four-year association with Sevenoaks-based private client portfolio management company Principal Investment Management which is sponsoring the event.

This year is the 250th anniversary of

CHEERS: Why not enjoy a night at the opera – down the pub – in Tunbridge Wells

Handel's death, and opera by definition's staging – the only production of the opera in the UK this year – follows last February's sell-out production of Mozart's Così fan Tutte at The Opera House which is, in fact, a Wetherspoon's pub.

JD Wetherspoon owns the Grade II-listed building, and it has restored the theatre to its former use, so it transforms from pub to theatre when necessary. Chief executive John Hutson said: "We're delighted to support opera by definition."

Anne Gilbert, chief executive of Principal, said: "It has been a rewarding association for both us and opera by definition. We take pride in our commitment to the community and our involvement with local arts and educational projects."

"We are thrilled to be able to help Tunbridge Wells experience a rare and beautiful performance."

The new translation is by Christopher Cowell with the opera by definition baroque orchestra, which features a rare instrument called the theorbo, a long-necked lute.

Performances are on February 9, 11 (sign interpreted) and 12, at 7.30pm each night.

Matinee February 11, at 1.45pm.

Facebook shares in debate

ASHFORD'S controversial 'shared space' town centre has a growing list of opponents – but they claim they are not just knocking local government.

The town has strict speed limits and allows cars and people to mix.

But as the popularity of the scheme gathers pace, one man is gathering opponents through online social networking site Facebook.

It pokes fun at the town's efforts but he denies it is not simply a "hate campaign against the local authorities".

The group has attracted almost 1,300 members since it was set up in November to raise concerns over the controversial road scheme.

But despite many members swapping scare stories about shared space – the group's title is 'Ashford's shared space is an accident waiting to happen' – the man who set it up says it was purely to raise a legitimate concern and not to slate the project.

Phil Thorne was inspired to set up the group because his mother, who has one eye, felt the new scheme had restricted her independence to get around the town.

He said: "I am very proud of my mum and how she has overcome her sight problems, I just felt something needed to be said for those people."

"The site has led to a lot of heated debate. It's all about raising awareness; this is not some sort of hate campaign against the local authorities."

Hart campaign won't Morph into memorial

COUNCIL bosses in the county town have ignored the heartfelt plea of nearly 3,000 people to build a memorial for artist Tony Hart.

Hundreds of people have joined a group on the social networking site Facebook titled 'Maidstone Would like a Statue or Memorial of Maidstonian Tony Hart'.

The story published in our sister mid-week paper Yourmaidstone was reported by national, and other local, newspapers and TV stations.

The popular online group, which suggests that some kind of statue or memorial for Hart could be included and funded as part of Maidstone council's plan to improve the high street, now has more than 2,800 members and is increasing every hour.

The group is urging people to put forward their ideas to council chiefs and spread the word to their friends.

Comments posted on the site show a statue of Hart's clay creation Morph is the most popular idea.

But despite the overwhelming response to the group the council says it has no intention of building a memorial for the much-loved artist, who was treasured by a generation of children who grew up watching TV shows Vision On and Take Hart.

A council spokeswoman said: "We don't have any plans to commission a statue of Tony Hart or Morph."

Inspirational

Fans have also been using the site to leave loving messages for their childhood hero and to show their support to the statue idea.

One message reads: "We should be proud of our connection with this talented role model who has inspired so many to have a go and enjoy art."

"From all accounts he was a true gentleman."

Lin Banks, from Maidstone, wrote: "A life-size replica of Morph would be a wonderfully fitting tribute to the memory of Tony Hart and if the riverfront in Maidstone is to be revamped it would be an ideal place to put such a fun piece of art."

"Let's hope the council takes notice of this campaign."

Barbara Neil-Bottle posted: "Maidstone doesn't often affect the rest of the country in a positive way, it's usually things like all the negative press, courtesy of Maidstone Hospital, that are brought to people's attention.

"Let's redress the balance and celebrate Tony Hart with a fitting tribute."

"I quite like the idea of a statue of Morph, or at least featuring Morph in some way."

Mr Hart, who died peacefully at his Surrey home aged 83 on January 18, was born in Hastings Road, Maidstone, on October 15, 1925, and attended St Margaret's Pre-Prep School.

He served as an officer with the 1st Gurkha Rifles in the Second World War before studying art at Maidstone College of Art – now the University for Creative Arts – graduating in 1950 and starting his 50-year TV career.

Feast to light up cathedral

CANTERBURY Christ Church University has invited residents to celebrate the Feast of Candlemas at Canterbury Cathedral.

The service, today, at 6.30pm, will be led by the University's Dean of Chapel, the Revd Dr Jeremy Law.

The centrepiece of the service will be a candlelit procession that will make its way down the length of the cathedral to the font at the end of the nave.

Dr Law, said: "It is a powerful and moving service which, through the symbolism of light, looks at the life of Jesus Christ."

"The privilege of leading worship in one of the world's most famous cathedrals is an expression of Canterbury Christ Church University's identity as a Church of England foundation."

Healthy start to service

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

THE Kent Health Watch scheme has been hailed a success after attracting 216 callers in its first four months.

A county councillor said the initiative was "better than antibiotics" for helping to reassure callers about health concerns.

The 'signposting' service, which Kent County Council has given a £300,000 annual budget, points callers to the correct NHS helpline. Complaints, concerns or compliments are then logged on a database, which is shared by the NHS.

At its launch in October, KCC said it would enable the county's 1.3 million residents to voice their opinions on health and social care. Cllr Alan Marsh, KCC's cabinet member for public health, said: "It's gone incredibly well."

But concerns have been raised about its value and whether the money should be spent directly on services.

KCC said half of its budget had been spent in the first four months with the £150,000 going towards the set-up, staff training and running of Kent Health Watch. An official said the annual budget equalled 1p per family per week.

If its use continues at the current rate, that works out at £694 per caller. Asked if he was concerned about the low volume of calls, Cllr Marsh said: "We don't want to see 5,000 calls coming in about health unless those calls are about the highest level of care being delivered. It stands up economically because for such a small amount we are able to give confidence and compassion."

So far, 70 per cent of the calls were complaints or concerns, eight per cent were compliments and 14 per cent requests for information. Areas of concern flagged up in primary care included 62 per cent of complaints about GPs and 21 per cent about dentists.

In acute healthcare, only three per cent of people raised concerns about infection control. The highest level of concern was over quality of service (35 per cent) and communication (21 per cent).

Cllr Marsh said: "This is the only system where you get a 24/7 response from a real person who takes all your concerns on board. People want to be reassured – it is better than antibiotics."

NHS West Kent's board called for regular reviews ahead of the launch. NHS West Kent's board called for regular reviews of its effectiveness ahead of the launch.

Steve Phoenix, the primary care trust's chief executive said: "Kent Health Watch is a useful way to signpost patients to local services. NHS West Kent aims to be as accessible to patients and the public as possible. Our freephone number – 0800 850 850 – which has received 1,074 calls since October, helps us achieve this, providing direct support and information about all local NHS services and other organisations which can help support patients. As a new service, KHW has the potential to develop and complement our helpline and we are working closely with KCC to achieve this."

KCC launched the service at Maidstone Hospital, on the anniversary of the publication of the health watchdog's report in the deaths of 90 patients from Clostridium difficile at Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust's hospitals.

A spokesman said the trust supported the launch of Health Watch: "We have had 15 cases referred to us. Each was logged and followed up by our Patient Advice Liaison Service (Pals). Six were informal complaints. None related to infection control."

A spokesman for NHS Eastern and Coastal Kent said: "Calls received by KHW relating to this trust are passed on to our Pals service so we are aware of the concerns raised and as yet have not felt the need to use the database."

East Kent Hospitals University NHS Trust said it welcomed any initiative.

Specialist schools defended

TEACHERS in Kent have attacked a report criticising the value of specialist schools, writes Steve Knight.

More than 100 schools and colleges across the county now specialise in a particular area of the curriculum, earning extra Government funding for improvements in their chosen subject.

However, a study by the University of Buckingham suggests the new system has led to schools with names that "do not mean very much" and that their perceived success was only because poorer performing schools were unable to obtain specialist status.

The report also said pupils attending schools specialising in a certain subject were often no more likely to obtain good grades than those at other schools.

But Neil Golding, deputy head of the non-selective Westlands School in Sittingbourne, said that was not the point.

"We could have gone for art back when we were deciding on a specialism because that was something we were very strong at, but we wanted to improve a subject our pupils weren't achieving such high grades in," he said.

"We went for maths and computing, and in maths the extra resources have made a big difference. The grades in ICT haven't necessarily seen much of an increase, but lots of different subjects have benefited.

"It's not just about the money. We have better quality teachers now and people are proud to be associated with the school."

The researchers compared the physics A-level results of specialist schools and found that more pupils achieved A grades at music schools than at science schools.

However, there were far more science schools considered (124) than music (eight).

Deborah Stanley, deputy head at Maidstone Grammar School for Girls, said improving attainment was one of several aims for a specialist school.

She said: "We're also required to work with the community, so we have people giving science lessons at primary schools and we also work with other secondaries, too.

"The extra money is always beneficial, but focusing on one specific subject helps you improve across the board and allows you to be more creative when teaching."

The Government said specialist schools were "thriving" and raising standards, while the Specialist Schools and Academies Trust said specialisms were catalysts which could improve a whole school.

A county council spokesman said: "KCC and the Advisory Service Kent have always supported and worked closely with those secondary schools that have sought to become specialist. Funding not only supports the curriculum in the schools themselves but also often benefits the wider community."

Port's Olympic screen joy

OLYMPICS fans from across Kent could watch the 2012 games together after Dover won the right to broadcast them on a giant video screen.

The 15ft monitor, which would be provided and installed free, could also be used to show other sporting events such as Wimbledon or the World Cup if the local council is granted planning permission.

Dover was selected as a potential Olympic Live Site after Canterbury – the preferred choice in Kent for the London Organising Committee for the Olympic Games (Locog) – was forced to pull out.

Cllr Julie Rook, the district council's portfolio holder for community, leisure and sport, said the screen would be installed by the end of April if everything went according to plan.

"We are terribly excited about it and it's quite amazing that we have been chosen. We had a street party and a big fireworks display to celebrate the Olympics handover last year, so they have seen we can put on a good show," she said.

"Dover would benefit from having the screen for 15 years. It could be used by businesses to advertise and for the council to provide information. But it would be fantastic for everybody to be able to come and watch a big event like Wimbledon together. It would be a huge cultural asset for the town."

If Dover gets permission to install the screen in Market Square, it will be the only location among 19 others in the country that is not a city.

Locog would provide and install the equipment, with content and operational management provided by the BBC. The annual running cost for the council would be about £16,000.

Cllr Rook said: "Dover was short-listed because Locog wanted an Olympic Live Site in Kent. Canterbury was chosen ahead of us, but its council had to pull out."

"We submitted our planning application this week, so I'm keeping everything crossed that it works out."

Cllr Rook added that the council was working with a range of partners for help with the running costs. Canterbury missed out on the chance to receive one of the screens when members of the council's ruling Tory executive voted against the idea earlier this month.

'Britain must boost Channel security'

THE French immigration minister has criticised British security at the ferry ports and Channel Tunnel during a visit to Calais where hundreds of migrants have set up camp.

Eric Besson also pledged that another Sangatte-style hostel would be "out of the question" because it would encourage more immigrants to gather in northern France.

He said: "Our English partners must apply themselves more actively in the reinforcement of checks and in security in Calais."

Before the Red Cross centre in Sangatte was bulldozed in 2002, it was used as a staging post by thousands of migrants trying to reach Kent from Calais.

It was blamed for the arrival of 50,000 immigrants over five years into the county.

Richard Ashworth, a Conservative MEP for the South East, said: "We were very happy about the announcement from the French government that there will be no Sangatte two. We think it is time for the British Government to match the determination the French government is showing."

Mr Ashworth praised the ferry, tunnel and port operators for their efforts in restricting the flow of migrants crossing into Kent.

But he said lorry drivers were facing violence due to the migrants becoming increasingly desperate.

There are also reports of migrants paying traffickers thousands of pounds to bribe drivers to take them over the Channel.

Mr Ashworth said: "I have continually lobbied against plans for similar camps in the past, as any such centre would provide a focal point for people traffickers and would create far more humanitarian problems that it would solve."

M Besson, who was in Calais on Tuesday, said he hoped to make a final decision about what to do over the migrant crisis in the port town by May 1. Refugees and economic migrants are living in appalling and conditions in makeshift shelters in woodland near the ferry port, which has become known as the "jungle". Migrant welfare organisations have been providing food and clothing but not overnight shelter. Aid agencies are concerned about the humanitarian situation and have called for a new shelter for the refugees.

A spokesman for the UK Border Agency said: "We will continue to work with France in fighting illegal immigration. Our shared determination has already created one of the toughest border crossings in the world."

"In the last five years we have stopped more than 88,500 attempts from people trying to enter the UK illegally, around 61,000 of those were at Calais alone."

He said ministers would be meeting with M Besson this month to discuss the migrant problem.

Video game evenings the new night out

Familys fight credit crunch at home

By GARETH ARNOLD

gareth.arnold@kosmedia.co.uk

MORE people than ever are playing safe as the recession worsens by swapping pricy nights out for evenings spent conquering the latest video games.

While many businesses struggle, the games industry has never had it better according to the latest trading figures, with a record Christmas at HMV and increasing sales at Game, who also own Gamestation.

Spokesman for HMV Canterbury said: "Demand for console and PC games and products in our stores in Canterbury is very strong, and we saw a record Christmas with games sales up by around a fifth."

HMV says the successful Christmas sales have been helped by due a strong selection of games for all three main consoles, as well as the wider 'family' appeal of the ground-breaking Nintendo Wii.

A spokesman said: "Part of this has to be down to the games offered across all three main platforms: Wii, Xbox and PS3."

"The consoles deliver an amazing gaming experience, especially Wii, which has helped to broaden the appeal of games and made them more of a 'family' product, increasingly moving them out of the bedroom and into the living room."

Popular

HMV say particularly popular games this Christmas included Call of Duty and FIFA 09, as well as Nintendo Wii favourites Mario Kart and Wii Play, as well as handheld hits 'Brain Training' and More Brain Training both out on Nintendo DS.

The combination of a large number of popular games, and several successful platforms on which to play them, has helped produce a lucrative trading climate for the industry, and as disposable incomes dwindle, gamers say it sometimes makes sense to stay in and relax in front of a warm console.

And modern gaming is far from the anti-social stereotype some might imagine.

Keen gamer Pete Blackett, from St Stephen's Road, Canterbury, said: "I think a lot of people go out one night and stay in another to save money."

"And with lots of games now you have a social aspect anyway. Playing Wii with your mates, or the massive multiplayer online role play games like World of Warcraft or Eve."

FAMILY FUN: The Nintendo Wii, advertised by the Redknap family, has brought video gaming into the living room

"With those you chat to people over the net using headsets, so you can either socialise with your mates down the pub and spend money on pints, or socialise online."

Canterbury's other major games retailer Game has also posted strong Christmas trading figures, with sales for the six-week period ending on January 9, up 16.6 per cent.

The company says it has benefited from the closure of competing retailers such as Woolworths and Zavvi.

A spokesman said: "The group has delivered a strong Christmas sales performance in a very difficult trading environment."

"The wider economic environment has led to challenging trading conditions, albeit that the UK also experienced significant changes to the competitive landscape with some competitors having limited availability of stock or ceasing to trade."

"These events gave some upside to the performance in the UK business during the latter part of this key trading period."

Both HMV and Game say they are also doing a roaring trade in secondhand games, and HMV has even launched a credit crunch busting offer which allows gamers to exchange old games for other goods.

A spokesman for HMV Canterbury said: "Another feature of our games offer is Re/Play – our pre-owned games offer. This is a deal for anyone sitting on a load of games they no longer play and would like to trade in."

"If you bring them in to HMV you can receive a credit that is redeemable not just against new games, but on any product that we sell in store: CDs, DVDs, technology products, t-shirts, books – you name it."

Shop worker gave 'gifts' to friends

SHOP girl Oluwadamilola Odedina started handing out free gifts to her pals when they went to River Island's Canterbury store.

Odedina, 20, of Tennyson Avenue, Canterbury, was caught red handed taking security tags of clothes and giving them to her friends.

When in store CCTV was checked she was clearly seen removing tags on two other occasions.

The two women she gave the clothes to have never been caught.

She admitted two counts of theft and one of attempted theft at Canterbury Magistrates Court when she appeared this week.

Phil Rowley, defending, said the Christchurch College marketing student was encouraged by the two other women to steal the clothes.

He said: "She didn't benefit from the thefts but was trying to curry favour with the two other women."

Odedina ordered to serve 100 hours unpaid work and told to pay £264.95 compensation to her former employer, plus £60 costs.

Sex offender jail conversion

MAIDSTONE Prison will be turned into a specialised sex offenders unit within the next five months.

The Prison Service confirmed the majority of inmates based in the prison in County Road, near to the town centre, will be sex offenders by the end of June.

Other offenders currently housed at HMP Maidstone will be moved to other prisons as the county town's jail focuses on expanding its sex offender treatment programme.

There will also be a small unit for foreign prisoners awaiting removal by the UK Border Agency. A Prison Service official said: "Over the next few months Maidstone will be changing its prisoner population as it expands its current role in providing sex offender treatment programmes.

"It is anticipated that by June 30, apart from a small population of foreign national prisoners, Maidstone will be dedicated to the delivery of these programmes.

"The dedicated foreign national prisoner unit will mean the UK Border Agency will be able to process removal proceedings more quickly."

COMMENT

Let's tackle this hidden menace

BBC revelations about asbestos in Kent schools must have greatly alarmed many parents, pupils and teachers.

But has the programme caused fear unnecessarily? Asbestos is deadly, it has blighted our society for decades and we still don't know how many lives it will claim.

In this county, particularly in Medway, many have contracted the deadly cancer mesothelioma as a result of working with asbestos before the dangers were realised.

It is still in homes, outbuildings, hospitals, schools and any number of other buildings. It was banned in the 1980s and experts agree it would be best if it was completely removed.

But while enclosed and solid, it does not pose a threat. Once disturbed, deadly fibres are released into the air. To do the work, schools would have to be shut for months.

KCC and Medway Council are adamant its presence in schools is well managed.

However, such are the devastating effects of exposure, this paper supports the call for an independent specialised body to oversee the monitoring of asbestos.

Brave settlement

NEWS that the Home Office is to shortly announce a new policy that could allow all Gurkhas and their families the same rights as those who retired after 1997 is to be welcomed.

All these brave soldiers, who served and fought on our behalf, have earned the right to settle here if they wish.

OPINION:

Why every child matters

Kent wants the best for all the county's pupils, whatever their talents, says KCC cabinet member Cllr Leyland Ridings

IF YOU were to hold a race and asked 20 children to compete, you wouldn't expect every child to cross the finish line at the same time.

All children are different and have differing talents, aspirations and abilities – and in Kent we completely understand this.

For the first time in Kent, 50 per cent of all pupils who took exams last year were able to achieve five A*-C GCSE grades including English and maths.

Excellent news. What an achievement for the pupils and a testament to the dedication of our schools and parents. Yet again this puts us above the national average and for the same results excluding English and maths, we are at almost 70 per cent, once more ahead of the game nationally.

In June 2008 the National Challenge was announced and immediately 30 of our high schools were identified as being at risk of not achieving the 2011 target of 30 per cent five A*-C grade GCSEs including English and maths.

I have every confidence that this will be achieved. This year, nine of our schools reached the target and the majority are close to it, although three dipped below the threshold.

Of the 33, three have been classified as outstanding by Ofsted and 11 are rated as good, while a further three are in the top five for contextual value added (the rate of improvement) in the county. In some schools there are areas for improvement and we are addressing this, helped by the additional £2.1 million provided by the Government.

Let's take a look at Castle Community School in Deal, which has hit the 30 per cent. It is rated as outstanding, is fifth in the county for value added, nationally is ranked seventh, has been awarded the Gold Artmark and 68 per cent of its pupils are achieving five A*-C grade GCSEs.

Visit the school and you feel the passion and enthusiasm of the pupils, staff, parents and governors. They focus on the needs of the pupils and provide activities to engage them. The ethos is very clear and echoes that of the county – every child matters.

Another example of an extraordinary school which finds itself on the list is Canterbury High, again classed as outstanding, second in the county for value added, consistently in the top of the national tables for improvement, has hit the 30 per cent target, has 90 per cent of all its pupils achieving five A*-C GCSEs and is mentioned on the Government's best practice website. These are only two of the 33 schools, so you can see the picture that is emerging here. There is a great deal of hard work going on and astonishing results being achieved in these schools. In Kent, we look at the child and see what is right for them and their future. We are leading the way on vocational training and this gives pupils who may not enjoy or thrive in the traditional classroom environment the opportunity to flourish and realise their ambitions. We provide hands-on training to give them experience and qualifications to make sure they get the career they want.

We do have some schools that will need more focused help to achieve the 2011 target, but they will get there. In some cases, there will be structural change, such as academy, federation or amalgamation. An excellent example of this is the Holmesdale Technology College and Malling School federation which has seen impressive results and progress this year.

In other areas, we will be providing extra support and all of the schools have drawn up a raising attainment plan. These are detailed plans to make sure each school reaches the 2011 target. Of course there are those that will need extra support – and we will provide it. Examples of how they are looking to tackle issues head-on include masterclasses in English and maths and focused teacher recruitment. Others are providing out-of-hours homework clinics, one-to-one tuition and parent engagement.

We don't want to give our children just enough education to hit targets. We are creating a whole package to set them up for life and give them ambition and the tools to achieve whatever their hopes allow. Each child is different, as are parents' aspirations and support, but I promise we are doing all we can to make sure their futures are among the best in the country.

• Leyland Ridings is KCC's cabinet member for children, families and educational achievement.

Cult of bridge wardens

The City of Rochester has many fine traditions that go back through history and make it the place it is today.

Traditions such as the Admiral's Cruise each year do no harm and put us apart from more recent up-and-coming places like Brighton, the history of which seems only to go back to Regency times.

But sometimes our historical traditions just don't perform as you would hope in the modern world.

The idea of having a shadowy medieval secret society administering our transport system sounds as if it is one of the more far-fetched ideas in The Da Vinci Code.

Yet it is real, set here in the 21st century, and it controls vital access across the towns. It is of course the bridge wardens, who might be entertaining if they were responsible for no more than the esplanade gardens.

But they control so much land alongside the Medway and access across the Medway so completely that they can be said to have had power without any responsibility to anyone.

They seem not to be a private firm for private benefit. They really do have a public responsibility and claim high ideals, but members of the public have no idea who they are or just what power they have.

We have no idea how they are appointed, how much money they control, what they are for, nor what their public objectives are.

The media should be able to publish a full list of their members, their assets and their public objectives. What do they have to hide?

Lessons in terminology

Dave Stewart (Letters, January 18) wonders whether I should call Kent's non-selective schools 'secondary-moderns' – and he's got a point.

Kent calls them 'high schools' which misled

Our youth on downward spiral

WHAT kind of terrible poison is infecting the minds of some of our young people?

I refer in particular to two extremely troubling articles in your paper last week (January 25).

One involved a schoolboy fight where a boy stamped on the head of another, leaving him in a coma and brain-damaged.

The other was an article about two teenage thugs who – without provocation – attacked a docile golden retriever, kicking it so hard that they broke its ribs and punctured its lungs.

The dog later died of its injuries.

Frighteningly, evil acts of brutality such as these are becoming increasingly common in this country.

With so many of our children constantly listening to gangsta rap music (replete with expletive-laden lyrics inciting listeners to attack women, gay people and the police) and playing ultra-violent computer games (involving prolonged scenes of torture and dismemberment), this must surely leave many youngsters disturbed, desensitised and dehumanised.

Our government is stupid and irresponsible to permit, through lax legislation, the retail of this mind poison.

As we observe the upsurge in fatal attacks on people and animals by psychopathic monsters who were once children, it is clear we are reaping the whirlwind for their ministerial incompetence.

an awful lot of parents this year.

Many of those who get school allocation letters offering places at high schools think their child must have passed the 11-plus.

After all it is pretty strange to call a school 'high' when about third of their intake are only there because they failed an exam.

Even Councillor Dance is concerned that so many are misled by this terminology.

The confusion is widespread. Many of the letters about Kent's education system in KoS and other papers refer to children going either to grammar or comprehensive schools, but, of course, you cannot have a comprehensive school when its intake has been shorn of the children who happen to be doing well at school aged nine or 10.

We need to find a term that is clear.

Robert Duncan Martin (also Letters, January 18) suggests that selection at nine or 10 years of age is perfectly natural, as selection goes on all the time in all aspects of life – the job market, sport, even romance.

I hope he had his tongue firmly in his cheek.

Grammar school selection tends to last seven years – very few transfer into or out of grammar school during those seven years, while fewer and fewer romantic selections last even half that long, though the consequences of romantic selection may last a lifetime – just as the consequences of 11-plus selection do.

All the pressure is on young people to make their romantic selections when they are a bit older. I suggest the same thing for academic selection: 18-plus seems a far more sensible age.

Paying for EU cousins

I can't think why Cllr Richard Long is so concerned about the rural community in East Kent losing out on the paltry £4 million of British taxpayers' money being begrudgingly handed back from the EU at Brussels. (East loses out on EU millions – KoS, January 25).

As Britain must now be the biggest contributor to the EU's annual budget, the amount looks a joke compared to the following and it is perhaps this Cllr Long should be furious about.

Between 2007-13 Poland's rural community will get 14 billion euros from the European Agricultural Guarantee Fund and 13bn euros from the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development.

And most of it will be free money from us, the biggest mugs in Europe and at a time when the British economy is on the very brink of the final abyss.

Silence speaks volumes

I was bemused to read that the directors of Northern Rock are to share bonuses worth £8.8m.

As a mere member of the public, who 'thought' that the Government had bailed out this badly run company and that Northern Rock was only still in existence because of 'public funds', I am deafened by the sound of silence from Gordon Brown's lips.

Mr Brown, why on earth haven't you to any vehicle using the road, but simply that they do so by keeping to the speed limit of 30mph.

Also we the residents of Rough Common are indebted to Mr Hudson (a resident of Herne Bay) for inspecting our road and classifying it "suitable for the traffic it carries". He states that it is bus route, but failed to mention that the service is only a local one and mostly using small vehicles in a one-way system.

He obviously knows more then the traffic manager of National Express coaches whose Dover/London service via the university has seen fit to restrict the service using Rough Common Road.

Mr Hudson is obviously a man of many talents, not only the self-appointed motorists spokesman for the South East, but also now considers himself a highways inspector together with which he now considers himself an expert on house valuations.

Come on Terry join the modern world and remember the old saying 'Jack of all trades'.

In our current economic climate people don't want to go speeding around wasting fuel in their cars, but want to conserve what resources they have in this uncertain future.

Rise in cheaper goods

As a result of the credit crunch it is reported that shoppers are turning more to the 'value' or 'basics' ranges in supermarkets.

I've noticed that in the Deal Sainsbury's many of their 'basics' range have increased in price recently. Even their own brand dog food has increased from 78p to £1.20!

More expensive brands have not increased in price. Have any other readers found this?

Call me a cynic, but this seems to be more than coincidence. I can't believe that the wholesale costs of these items have increased pro rata. Perhaps Sainsbury's would care to comment?

*Dave Stewart,

Justice must be served

The arguments used against the campaign for Gurkha Justice are exactly the same as those used against the abolition of slavery and apartheid.

Similarly, such arguments are backed up with grossly exaggerated costs.

If a medic, a plumber or a fruit picker works in this country they will have the same conditions and pay as their British counterparts. Why shouldn't a soldier expect the same principle of parity?

More than 45,000 Gurkhas have died for this country with four times that number wounded, including those who have been blinded and become amputees.

Often they have been patched up and sent back with inadequate pensions.

They are not mercenaries for they could earn far more if they were.

Four countries have offered to accommodate them in their armed forces each with superior pay and conditions, yet they prefer to stay loyal to Britain.

They have guarded embassies and personnel in every troublespot throughout the world and their bravery has saved hundreds of British lives.

We owe the Gurkhas a debt of honour. If we fail to accommodate their legal claim we will demoralise our own British soldiers as well as the serving Gurkhas.

At this time when we must find a way of extricating ourselves from the Bush/Blair crusade without leaving a void for terrorism. We need our servicemen.

There is a new spirit of hope blowing from across the Atlantic which may end imperialism and American hegemony and by doing so strengthen the beneficial influences of our Anglo-Saxon heritage.

The world will still need a strong international peacemaking police force led by a transformed United Nations.

For modern guerrilla war there is no better soldier with their discerning smile and steely resolve they have a touch of Gandhi and an ability to defuse a situation.

In an age of dishonesty and political corruption I thank God We have true Brits like Joanna Lumley and Peter Carroll.

Rest assured that those concerned with fair treatment of Gurkhas will be the same people who will campaign for social justice within Britain.

Cash for wrong reason

Prime Minister Gordon Brown and his party should resign.

Paying the families of Irish bombers £12,000, whatever the politics, is criminal.

If this is okay then it's going to cost us a fortune in Iraq and Afghanistan.

When the wars finish there what next – ex Nazi families claiming? We pay benefits to the world's immigrants or those who never bother to work with big families.

I will soon have to sign on with no work. I have paid a fortune in taxes during my lifetime. I will get nothing.

Perhaps I should think of taking another nationality – I would be okay then.

Boris, this is not fare

The London Assembly this week debated Mayor Boris Johnson's budget proposals, the headline of which was his promise to not increase the Greater London Authority's share of council tax this year.

This is relatively easy to achieve without effecting frontline police and fire services for one year; other local authorities have managed it with much larger budgets.

It is, however, dishonest of the mayor to claim that he is saving Londoners money.

While the council tax freeze will save the average London household just 11p a week, Mr Johnson's decision to raise bus and tube fares will cost those who use public transport anything between £160-300 extra a year.

Holding tax down with one hand and snatching fares with the other does not represent value for money for working Londoners. Londoners expect far more from their mayor than a delay in increases to their council tax bill. They expect someone who will stand-up for their city, fight for funds and protect them during the recession.

There is nothing in Boris Johnson's budget or economic recovery plan to show that he understands or appreciates his role.

Race to make it better

With such economic misery afoot I can't help thinking Canterbury City Council should be finding ways to make local residents' lives a little easier.

Perhaps the council should spend less time jacking-up beach hut rents, performing daily policy U-turns and making excuses for not having cleaned up the graffiti and just get on with the things we all expect from a professionally-run local council.

Like cleaner streets, public open spaces that stay public, toilets that are free so you can spend a penny without having to pay for the privilege and, top of the list, taking action to make sure all of the pot-holes and broken pavements that Kent County Council can't be bothered to fix are properly repaired.

After that perhaps they could give us all something to look forward to.

My vote would be for a return of the Tour de France. It was a wonderful spectacle and everyone enjoyed it – and after the success it proved last time I'm sure we could get it sponsored. So come on Canterbury City Council – get on yer bike and give us all something to look forward to.

Cllr Alex Perkins Canterbury City Council

Calm down Mr Hudson

My thanks go to Richard Purves (Letters, January 25) for his observations in relation to the traffic calming measures experienced in Coxheath.

However, any such measures perceived for Rough Common are very remote indeed due to a statement by Kent County Council prior to the current economic climate that any such funding for even any additional signage would not be available until at least 2010/11.

This will undoubtedly please 'boy racers' like Terry Hudson (also Letters, January 25) whose idiosyncratic ideals are against any traffic calming measures whatsoever.

I would like to point out I am not opposed

The journey begins

AFTER the inauguration begins the hard work for President Barack Obama.

So far, it looks like he's hit the ground running: commitment to close the Guantanamo prison and sending highly-qualified emissaries to the Middle East hotspots, as well as keeping the American economy going.

Like millions of others around the globe, I watched the swearing in ceremony on TV.

Hawaii is where President Obama was born and raised. It's a small state, an island state in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, the kind of place where everybody knows everybody and many people have had direct contact with Barack, or knew his mother or the grandparents who raised him.

I thought his speech was good: his quiet confidence, his commitment and sense of purpose.

Are the expectations too high for this presidency? I don't think so. I think the highest hurdle was crossed when American voters defied expectations by electing an African-American as president.

This was a defining moment in American history. Barack Obama placed his hand on Abraham Lincoln's bible for the inaugural ceremony. The days of slavery and segregation had ended at last.

When I was a child, my family lived for a few years in Texas, back in the days when segregation was in force. As a five-year-old girl, the first signs in public places I learned to read were those for drinking fountains and (as the British say) the facilities. Divided into those for whites and those for coloured.

I remember arguing with my even younger sister about the merits of the two different drinking fountains.

"Look Susan. This is the water fountain we have to use. It says 'white'."

American Sandi Carney-Wadsworth, from Tunbridge Wells, is a former television news broadcaster in Hawaii and a member of Democrats Abroad, the overseas branch of the US Democratic Party. Here she explains what Barack Obama's inauguration means to her.

I pressed the button for the water. "See. White water." She nodded in agreement.

"And over there, is the fountain that says 'coloured'. Why, I bet it has colored water that comes out of that fountain. Just like a rainbow! Why don't we try that one?"

I remember lifting her up to the fountain to reach, but before we could push the button to discover the delights of rainbow water, an African-American lady rushed over and shooed us away.

"Can't you girls read? This isn't your fountain. Yours is over there. Get away from here."

So much for our early attempts at integration. We waited at a good vantage point until we could see someone drinking from the coloured fountain and we saw the water was just the same.

When I watched television last week of the crowds in Washington, I saw the faces of Americans of every colour, rapt with attention and hope.

In England, watching the BBC broadcast of the inauguration, I felt hope, too. I felt that as a nation, our United States of America crossed the dividing line at last.

I loved hearing one of the African-American interviewees explaining what it meant to him. He said: "You know, you can't go on blaming everything on The Man when 'hey' you are The Man!"

KENT ADULT EDUCATION

Canterbury College

Scholarships could save parents half of private school fees

AS the country officially enters into recession, parents have been urged to apply for scholarships at a Kent private school that could save up to 50 per cent on fees.

Pupils who show outstanding promise academically or in sport, art and drama could benefit from discounted entry to St Edmund's School in Canterbury if they are joining the senior school in September 2009.

Headmaster Jeremy Gladwin said the application deadline, February 13, was fast approaching.

"The scholarship system opens up the many benefits of St Edmund's, including specialist tuition from dedicated, enthusiastic staff, superb facilities and excellent pupil-to-staff ratios, to young people showing particular promise," he said.

"Successful applicants join an environment geared to ensuring pupils fulfil their potential.

"Expert guidance is one aspect of that – our sports scholars, for example, can call on a number of former county and international cricketers on our staff."

Kent offers teachers a wide range of experiences and an opportunity to work in a varied and exciting environment.

Obama's inauguration gives feel-good factor to county's universities

By JENNA PUDELEK

jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

THE historic day when Barack Obama was sworn in as the first black President of the United States was marked with a series of special events by students in Kent.

The Universities at Medway celebrated the inauguration with an 'upbeat day' featuring poetry readings, African drumming and volunteering opportunities designed to celebrate cultural diversity.

Canterbury Christ Church University also marked the end of the Bush administration with a public lecture on Wednesday.

Jae Fowler, the campus tutor at Canterbury Christ Church at Medway, who organised the event on inauguration day, said: "The day was a huge success and extremely well attended.

"The Universities at Medway attract a broad spectrum of students from a variety of social, cultural and ethnic backgrounds and therefore it was extremely appropriate for us to mark the historic inauguration of President Obama in this positive, life affirming way."

Students from Canterbury Christ Church, Kent and Greenwich universities took part in the activities and workshops.

Mick Haworth, who is in his first year studying engineering at the University of Greenwich at Medway, said: "The events have been outstanding and the entire atmosphere on campus has been charged with excitement and general positivity.

"In this day and age there is a real tendency to focus on the negative side of life, so to attend an 'upbeat day', particularly on such an auspicious occasion, proved uplifting and refreshing."

Millions of people around the world watched President Obama's inauguration last Tuesday, and listened as he pledged to tackle global warming, terrorism and the financial crisis.

Dr Jan Sellers, who runs the Labyrinth

Project at the University of Kent at Medway, gave staff and students the opportunity to walk the labyrinth to help them achieve focus and peace as part of the 'feel-good' theme of the day.

Dr Sellers said: "Since the 1990s, the labyrinth has been increasingly used as a contemplative tool.

"Its twists and turns, always leading to the centre, requiring concentration just to stay on path, and this helps to keep the walker focused and 'in the present', quietening the mind. It can be a wonderfully calming, peaceful experience and can provoke deep inner reflection."

Professor Brian Ward talked about the connections, real and imagined, between President Obama and Martin Luther King in the public lecture In the Shadow of a Dream, Out of the Shadow of the 1960s.

The chair of American studies at the University of Manchester, said: "During the election campaign and around the inauguration, journalists, scholars and ordinary people alike repeatedly invoked memories of Dr King and his 'I Have a Dream' speech, to try to put Obama into some kind of meaningful historical context.

"What I'm interested in is the way in which Obama has skillfully aligned himself with the legacy of the civil rights movement in general and Dr King in particular, but without being seen as solely a 'black candidate' interested in only racial matters."

Masterclasses give bright sparks a chance to shine

KENT'S budding mathematicians are taking part in a series of masterclasses at one of the county's universities.

Last Saturday, Year Nine pupils began with a lesson entitled Leonardo's Rabbits and Alice's Ice, which explored number sequences describing growth in nature – from breeding rabbits to growing crystals of ice.

Dr Andy Hone, from the University of Kent's institute of mathematics, statistics and actuarial science, said: "It is important for the university to get involved with supporting gifted children in the local community, and I am very enthusiastic about this new initiative."

Dr David Acheson of the University of Oxford will present the pupils with certificates from the Royal Institution of Great Britain and the best student will receive a prize sponsored by drugs firm Pfizer after the final class on March 14.

Pupils brush up on their skills to achieve top marks

DOG grooming students at a leading college in Kent are celebrating achieving 100 per cent pass marks this year.

Seven canine pamperers received a credit in their external examinations on their City & Guilds Advanced Certificate, which is the lead qualification in the industry developed by the Pet Care Trust and the British Dog Groomers' Association.

Bathing, grooming and styling of dogs as well as general care and common ailments are covered by the qualification, which is provided at Hadlow College near Tonbridge.

Julie Harris, a leading dog groomer and tutor on the Advanced Certificate, said: "This qualification is highly respected throughout the whole grooming industry. I'm extremely proud of the success rate we have here at Hadlow which reflects the commitment of our staff and students."

Achieving justice through equality and engagement.

Group Equality, Diversity and Community Engagement Manager

South East, based in Maidstone, Kent • £31,370 to £38,812

Are you happy just sitting in the corner ticking the diversity box, or would you rather drive positive change at the heart of an organisation that affects the safety, security and well-being of each and every citizen in England and Wales?

The CPS is not only responsible for the prosecution of crime, we also play an increasingly important role across the whole Criminal Justice System, with partner agencies and championing the rights of victims.

With sensitive and serious crimes, such as hate crime and violence against women having a direct impact on all communities, there's never been a more important time for us to know the people we serve and ensure that they gain a better understanding of how we work and make decisions.

You'll build their confidence and trust by putting equality and diversity right at the heart of everything we do and assuring people from all communities that we will be their champions for justice. You'll achieve this by inviting their feedback and opening up the Service to scrutiny, enabling communities to inform how we work, as well as developing and delivering regional agendas and transforming internal practices to create a truly world-class service.

To have the impact that we want you to have, you'll need experience of driving equality and engagement agendas in a complex public or voluntary sector environment. A tactful, diplomatic approach and superb communication skills will be essential. Regular travel will be involved.

If you're looking for real challenge and involvement, the work you do here will have a direct impact on our success both now and in the future.

For more details, and to apply online, please visit www.cps.gov.uk/careers and look in the 'Professional Careers' section.

For a confidential discussion about this position, please call Libby Davies, Recruitment Consultant at the CPS, on 0151 239 6573.

Please note, this vacancy will go live on Monday 2nd February 2009.

Avensis 'wagon' set to cram extra sales

By STEVE LOADER

SALES of family models in the Ford Mondeo class have been hit by the rise of 4x4s, MPVs and premium models like the BMW 3-Series.

But there is growing interest in estate or Tourer versions that might be a spin-off from the 'lifestyle estate' phenomenon created by the likes of the BMW 3-Series Touring and Audi A4 Avant.

Mazda has been one beneficiary, with sales of the latest Mazda6 Estate building upon the fine reputation of the previous car.

And Toyota has also gained; the previous Avensis always looked better in estate form and sold well. Manufacturer and dealers predict even more interest in the newly-launched Avensis Mk III.

It is not hard to see why, since the newcomer is far more eye-catching than its predecessor, with sharper lines than the rounded style of before and the Tourer or estate looks a class act against upmarket German opposition.

The Avensis hatchback option has also been deleted in favour of creating a more 'premium' perception of the model and the estate was built as a separate entity from the saloon, to ensure it could deliver the necessity load capacity, aerodynamics, economy and emissions.

Robert Hobbs, centre manager at Motorline Toyota, Canterbury, said: "We are confident that around half of new Avensis sales will be for the Tourer. It looks great, quality is even higher than before, it's practical and would-be buyers are impressed by the options offered – they can even have cream leather or a panoramic roof, for instance."

This third generation Avensis was engineered and designed in Europe, for exclusive production at Toyota's factory near Derby.

Toyota has pepped up the package with new 'Valvematic' petrol engines for more power and performance yet 10-26 per cent lower emissions via variable valve timing.

Diesel options have also been revised to lower emissions by around 10 per cent and there is even a 'Multidrive S' continuously variable transmission (CVT) option.

This auto gearbox format has not proved popular on larger cars, but Toyota claims to have eradicated the type's characteristic whine.

The drive towards economy and lower emissions was also bound to cause manufacturers to re-evaluate the CVT, especially as they are under pressure to reduce average CO2 emissions across their line-ups – the new Avensis will cut Toyota's fleet average CO2 emissions to 140g/km by 2009.

Toyota made much of the old car's refinement and has driven down NVH – noise, vibration and harshness – levels on the latest car too in a bid to nibble at German premium marque volumes, much as Ford and Vauxhall hope with the latest Mondeo and the Insignia.

More Soul to Kia

KIA'S 'cult car' in waiting goes on sale in March after extensive tuning for UK roads and drivers.

The Korean marque says the new five-door Soul is the first of its cars to get this bespoke ride and handling package, which was completed by Lotus, no less.

Kia UK managing director Paul Philpott said: "The result of our partnership with Lotus is a more composed ride which we think is much more suitable to what our roads can throw at Soul, and additionally, it is also a more exciting car to drive.

"We firmly believe that customers who have never considered a Kia before will look at Soul and see it as a viable option when it comes to buying a new car."

Kia also plans greener versions of its Ford Focus challenger, the Ceed. Six Cee'd ISG (Idle Stop and Go) models delivering up to 15 per cent fuel savings are planned. These cars will also benefit from a lighter manual gearbox to offset the small extra weight of the ISG components.

Kangoo attitude right for today

HAVING started the boom in van-based MPVs, Renault is following-up with an all-new 'fully glazed' version of the latest Kangoo van.

The five-door model due in a few weeks will be joined shortly afterwards by the funky three-door Be-Bop – both should do well in the current economic climate as cut-price family transport or as holdalls for sole traders and small businesses.

The five-door carries on where the previous Kangoo left off, with two rear sliding doors as well as the high-lift tailgate cum rain shelter, but the Be-Bop is a new format aimed at tapping into a younger market.

The budget appeal of the cars will be underpinned by flexible powerplants, notably Renault's powerful yet economical 1.5dCi diesel units.

We can also expect a typically French ride comfort – cars like this truly are the spiritual successors to those French classics, Renault's own '4' and the Citroën 2CV.

Van award winners get week on show

PEUGEOT dealer WJ King has declared next week as 'Van Week' with special deals capitalising on the French brand's six van awards in 2008 and another already for 2009.

The dealer group, with Peugeot outlets at Dartford and Sidcup, has made the triple award-winning Bipper (from £8,195) the star of its LCV (light commercial vans) selection.

The Bipper comes with 1.4-litre petrol or HDi diesel engines and is available with easy and eco-friendly electronically-controlled manual gearbox.

Soon due in – Mini's all-new cult crop top

MINI fans wanting the roof down have had to make do with a convertible based on the Mk 1 car – even though an all-new hatchback model arrived in 2006.

But March brings an all-new Mini crop top and, hopefully, better weather economically and atmospherically in which to enjoy it.

Initially, it will be available in the more premium Cooper (from £15,995) and Cooper S (from £18,995) formats, but expect a cheaper One entry model later on in order to chase demand that made the Mark 1 Britain's best-selling small convertible from 2004-2008.

The new car looks more solid than before and parent brand BMW claims that 'scuttle shake' or reduced stiffness – caused by chopping the roof – has also been moderated, yet weight has been curbed by 10 kilos and boot capacity marginally improved.

It also gains BMW's award-winning EfficientDynamics systems for better economy and CO2 emissions. These features, already seen on the Mini hatch and other BMWs, include Auto Start Stop, Brake Energy Regeneration – recovering energy otherwise lost in barking – and Shift Point Display, which advises on the best moments to change gear.

The halo model for the line-up will be the high-performance Mini Cooper S Convertible with its distinctive bonnet power bulge and air scoop plus large twin tailpipes, rear bumper diffuser and two-piece rear fog lamp. For the first-time in a Mini Convertible, air con is standard and there is a lockable glovebox 'cooler'.

The automatic canvas roof retracts or closes in just 15 seconds and even at speeds of up to 20mph – nice to have if there is a sudden downpour.

As an alternative to the complete top-down driving experience, the full width of the electric roof can be retracted by approximately 40cms to create 'a sunroof' and at speeds of up to 75mph.

Unlike its predecessor's fixed anti-roll hoops, which tended to hamper rearward vision, the new car features a single-piece roll bar behind the rear seats that pops up in milliseconds and protects passengers in any collision.

Rear passengers can also adjust the height of their head rests this time too.

However, the optional 'Openometer', recording the time spent by the owner driving with the top down, sounds like one marketing gimmick too many... or a poser's delight.

by STEVE LOADERCHIEF DRIVING CORRESPONDENT
steve.loader@kosmedia.co.ukVW Passatt CC

AFTER raving about the latest VW Golf – a downsize to tempt diehard big car fans – I find myself initially struck dumb by the new Passatt CC.

For if we are going to hell in a global economic meltdown then the 'handcart' is not going to be what appears to be a vastly expensive four-door luxury coupé.

But the CC is less a toy for a fat cat who tripped us onto the slippery slope to ruin, but more a sound buy for a canny sort with financial feet still on firm ground.

He or she might have their heart set on the dramatic Mercedes-Benz CLS four-door coupé, but allowed the brain to say: "But that starts at £46,000 – think again, especially now the world has gone belly-up."

Then along comes the CC, from less than half the price and drop dead gorgeous too. Sold.

Okay, there are a few caveats. For instance, what was VW thinking of when naming it CC? These initials have been widely used elsewhere to describe a 'coupé convertible', yet this

The nice way to go to hell

CC's roof does not fold, although frameless door windows suggest VW has this trick up its sleeve for later.

Apparently, the abbreviation was coined for 'Concept Coupé' and then morphed into 'Comfort Coupé', which is apt though I suspect 'Confused Coupé' will linger in the minds of cynics.

There is also the suspicion that this is one concept that really should have come out of upmarket sister Audi's marketing department rather than VW's, but maybe the senior brand needed something to pep up the image of its Passatt family saloon/estate line?

And it does that all right.

Not that there is much of the saloon left above the platform – the racy CC is longer, wider and some 5cms lower than its prim sister.

At the cost of the saloon's fifth seat, the CC can also carry four people in considerable comfort though rear headroom is compromised slightly by that lower roofline.

Amazingly, there is even more boot space too – 47 litres extra to impress the golfing set and convince the family buyer he is not giving up on practicality – plus a ski slot between the rear chairs.

Indeed, it is the CC's ability to please across the board without conceding everyday convenience that really counts and a modest premium of £5,000 more than the cheapest Passatt saloon.

And don't think the mainstream car's interior has been simply carried over; the CC's cabin is far more in keeping with its upmarket image and there is also a £795 panoramic roof option as fitted to the test car – it might not be a drop-top yet, but the glass roof makes the CC the next best thing.

I was also pleased to be testing the CC in its 'raw state'; apart from that roof and a few other options our car was the entry model – the 1.8-litre petrol – and it shows this car can look pushed on the cheap.

The engine is smooth, economical and powerful enough for a relatively weighty car, yet makes it feel light on its feet, helped by excellent speed-sensitive steering; the CC might look too big to carry off the Coupé label, but it can definitely hack it.

There are all kinds of gadgets you can add, yet even the all-wheel drive 3.6-litre V6 with VW's famed auto/manual DSG gearbox will set you back just £31,000 before you raid the options list. It does not sound like a lot of money for a car that turns heads from every angle and, as our minimal list of potential rivals shows, there are few four-door cars that offer such style for similar outlay.

Bridge to the future

A RESEARCH spin-off from a £50 million initiative launched by Housing Minister Margaret Beckett has landed in Dartford, writes Tony Patey.

Thirty people are working on research projects at The Bridge, part of the 7,000 jobs officials claim will be created by the initiative and development of the rest of the site.

The facilities are linked to a £40 million research centre at Dagenham to be built over the next three years by the Thames Gateway Institute for Sustainability.

Research and demonstration projects worth more than £10 million will be carried out. Mrs Beckett said the initiative will lead to the development of innovations aimed at reducing "negative impacts on the environment". She said it represents collaboration by global leaders in academia and business to form a public-private partnership aimed at bringing innovations to market more quickly. With the contribution of the environmental technology sector set to double over the next eight years, the institute should be a magnet for investment and jobs.

Early research projects are focusing on construction, energy and waste.

Ed Metcalfe, chief scientific advisor at the South East England Development Agency, said: "The institute provides a real opportunity to test and implement new technologies. It will provide credible, independent data on their performance in use."

Ian Short, deputy chief executive of the London Thames Gateway Development Corporation, said: "The institute is central to the Government's plan to establish the Gateway as the world's first eco-region."

Research at Dartford includes a low to zero-carbon trial on homes. The project uses innovative insulation, renewable energy and water-saving technologies. An initial pilot will include 10 homes at Temple Hill, with plans to extend to 400-500 properties at mixed use sites.

There is also a project capturing carbon from algae in a sustainable and cost-effective way. C-Questor LLP will construct algae ponds to produce biomass for energy.

It will also explore the possibilities for secondary products such as soil remediation agents, pharmaceuticals and food additives. FirstLight Energy is another commercial partner in the venture, promoting light capture using fibre optic technology.

Academic inputs are led by the University of Greenwich. The Bridge mixes employment and residential development with community, retail and leisure facilities on a 264-acre brownfield site.

Delegates urged to plan ahead

KENT businesses asking how they are going to survive the recession should instead be posing the question: How do we flourish and position ourselves for the upturn?

That was a key message from last week's Recession Buster event run by Thames Gateway Chamber of Commerce in partnership with Kent Science Park at Sittingbourne.

Delegates at the Newton House conference centre heard Steve Wood, growth programme director of Baker Tilly, warn against a knee-jerk reaction towards cutting costs. It might, for example, be better to ease prices slightly to show that a business is putting a value on giving a particularly good service in relation to rivals. Obviously, managing risk and cashflow are vital, but strategy and acquisition should also figure high on the agenda.

Mr Wood also outlined what banks are looking for when deciding about lending, from having a clear strategy and business plan to willingness of management to commit funds.

Nick Hobden, a partner at law firm Thomson Snell & Passmore, said 'downsizing' can cover redundancy, retirement, issues surrounding capability and misconduct, and changing the terms of, for example, pay and hours. Employees may consider taking sabbaticals or career breaks.

Delegates were also told that businesses and individuals worrying about paying tax on time can contact the Revenue's Business Payment Support Service. The number is 0845 3021435 and lines are open 8am to 8pm during the week and 8am to 4pm at weekends.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The Garden of England has some of the loveliest scenery in the country – and what better industry to take advantage than film-making and its spin-offs? This is where the Kent Film Office comes in, set up in 2006 by KCC. For every £1 spent on location another £2.50 is spent in the local economy, and more than £5 million has been generated since 2006. KFO has helped with everything from big budget films such as The Other Boleyn Girl to television dramas Spooks and EastEnders. Day-to-day work is carried out by a small team headed by Tanya Oliver, right, head of the strategic development unit, and Kent film officer Gabrielle Lindemann, left. Here they talk with KOS Media Business Editor Tony Patey:

Q What are your backgrounds?

A T: I've worked at KCC for 10 years in a range of roles and have been in the film office for two years.

G: I did a degree in film video and photographic arts and from there went to the BBC. I stayed about 10 years in production, then became freelance for another five years.

Q Where is KFO now?

A T: It's come an incredibly long way since 2006. We have an established website with a range of information on locations, crews, facilities and what has been filmed in Kent.

We work closely with district and borough councils, our partners English Heritage, the National Trust and Screen South.

G: At the start it was just me, but it became clear very quickly – what with answering the phone, mapping the county for locations and creating the website – that we needed help. Film inquiries have gone from about 250 in the first year up to 500. There are two extra staff.

Q What about the future?

A T: We have just developed the Kent film and television strategy 2008-12 and one of the key parts of that is putting together a development fund.

The problem is that we have one of the few parts of the UK which doesn't have a pot of money to attract film and television.

We did have a pilot investment in The Calling, which was £75,000, and that spun off half a million into the local economy, but that was a one-off. We want to do that in a more measured way and be on a par with the rest of the UK. The endgame is to put Kent first on the filming map.

G: Once we have a development fund we'll still need to have the locations and the infrastructure, and to attract the right business.

One of the major aims is to map the county and market it internationally. The money is the carrot, but we'll still need to provide the best service.

Q Is there a figure for the fund?

A T: We're looking for about half a million pounds. We'll put some in, and then try and attract match-funding from the South East England Development Agency and perhaps money from Europe as well.

Q What about home-grown production units?

A G: If you compare us with counties with major studio complexes, such as Manchester or Pinewood, we have comparatively little infrastructure here, but on the other hand if you look round Maidstone Studios we have quite a high level of support.

We have a large sector of small firms that do corporate work. If you want to support large film and television productions, we would need to grow that sector, but I don't think that would be difficult because the industry goes where the work is.

Q What are your favourite films?

A T: Watership Down, and Pride and Prejudice.

G: Coen brothers, European art cinema, Kent-born director Peter Greenaway, anything new and weird.

Q How do you relax?

A G: I wander the Kent countryside with a camera in my hand. I also have an allotment.

T: I read a lot, everything and anything. And I like walking, especially in the Lake District.

This time it's personal

FURTHER detail is emerging about Personal Accounts – the pension plans every employee will have to contribute to from 2012 unless they are already in a good quality scheme.

Firstly, the Personal Accounts Delivery Authority (PADA) set up to organise the scheme has asked organisations to tender for its administration.

The chosen applicant will be responsible for setting contribution schedules, managing contribution limits and dealing with late payments. The winner need not necessarily be a pensions expert but should have the capacity to cope with millions of data records and have efficient online systems. Early interest has been from Europe and North America, so it may not be a UK organisation.

PADA will draw up a shortlist of three to six bids by April, narrowing it to three and announcing a decision by June 2010.

Meanwhile, there is speculation that the end of voluntary provision in 2012 will lead to employers using the introduction of Personal Accounts as an opportunity to review schemes and lower contributions.

The Association of Consulting Actuaries discovered in a recent survey that almost two-thirds of employers predicted lowering the pension benefits they provide or even closing schemes in the wake of Personal Accounts. They also found more people expected to opt out and not save than is predicted by the Government, so Personal Accounts could end up being a bit of a flop that damages existing schemes.

Shadow work and pensions secretary Chris Grayling suggested recently that Stakeholder Pensions may be an alternative to Personal Accounts, so we don't know what could happen if there is a change of government in the next couple of years.

Firms on the move warned of pitfalls

BUSINESSES thinking of moving to less expensive rental premises or cutting back on space are being urged to avoid the pitfalls.

Matthew Dugdale of Kingsley Smith Solicitors LLP, said: "Failing to give notice at the right time can be expensive – most quarterly leases require the tenant to pay the rent until the end of the subsequent quarter.

"Also agree early on the dilapidations for which you are responsible. It may be cheaper to make any necessary repairs yourself."

Firms on the move should also make sure they are not breaking contracts with employees – a modern contract should cover this.

Mr Dugdale said: "If you are assigning your lease, check the position as regards the guarantee of the incoming tenant's obligations. Not only can you find yourself with an unexpected liability if the new tenant defaults, but your bank may keep your account on a tighter reign while the potential liability hangs over you."

Gills chief praises boss for breathing new life into team

Give Stimmo his due, says Scally

By: PHIL HOUGHTON

GOOD JOB: Paul Scally (left) says Mark Stimson is responsible for the "culture change" at Priestfield

By DAVID PRITCHARD

GILLINGHAM fans should be grateful to manager Mark Stimson for giving them something to cheer about for the first time in years, according to club chairman Paul Scally.

After a slow start to the season, Gills have shown signs in recent weeks of being capable of challenging for automatic promotion from League Two. The club have not posted a top half finish for six seasons, a largely barren spell for fans who have seen the club relegated twice.

Stimson, who was hired by Scally to instigate a "culture change" at Priestfield, was in charge as the club were relegated last year after being appointed mid-season.

The chairman resisted calls from some supporters to sack the manager last summer and believes Gills are starting to reap the rewards.

"I'm delighted for the manager because he took a lot of unjustified criticism when he joined us," he said. "He had a load of problems to sort out and it's taken him, as it would any decent manager, six months to a year to sort all the issues out and get his new team playing as they are now."

"It's very pleasing for everyone at the club because for the first time in four or five years we are having a go at something again. It's a lovely feeling and long may it continue."

"It's a whole new era now with new players, no agendas and a team that wants to play for each other. There are no hidden agendas, no camps and there's very much a unity between everyone at the club and that's a nice feeling really."

But not everyone is so convinced. There were boos around Priestfield from a section of the fans on the final whistle as Gills lost 2-1 to Lincoln City on Tuesday night, even though it was their first league defeat at home since August.

Stimson, who has had a mixed relationship with the fans during his 15 months in charge, believes he will always have some sceptics but remains unfazed by the invective.

He said: "I'm not really worried about the encouragement from the supporters to be honest. We're a strong group and there's a few in there like me who get a buzz out of that, a mad kick out of people putting me down."

"I've had it at Grays and Stevenage and I really do get off on it. I won't ever win them all over, but that's not a problem."

Scally has also been a focus for unhappy fans during the low points of his 14-year spell at the club.

He said: "I think fans get frustrated and when they do they just vent their anger on the people who are easiest to vent their anger on."

"That's either me, the players or the manager; that's the culture of football really. But I think we've always been fairly focused and believed in each other."

Shakey ups the pace in superbike testing

BRITISH superbike champion Shane Byrne is among the favourites to win the opening round of the 2009 World Superbike Championship after going quickest in an official test in Portugal.

The Sheppey rider shocked fellow competitors and works teams in the paddock at the Portimao circuit by recording the quickest lap time on all three days of the test last Sunday. Byrne set a time 0.2 seconds faster than factory Ducati riders Ben Spies and Noriyuki Haga.

The test was Byrne's second at the Portuguese circuit with his new team Sterilgarda Ducati, and the Kent rider was delighted with his performance.

He told the team website: "The last three days of testing have been really useful. I got a good feeling with the bike and I was able to test different solutions especially on the set-up and on the suspension."

"The team did a really good job and they made the bike more suitable for my riding style. As a consequence, we recorded excellent times. Being the quickest rider for three days in a row is a big satisfaction and it allows me hope for the future."

Despite his pace in the test, Byrne is worried riding for an independent Ducati team, rather than a works team, could halt his title ambitions if there is not a regular supply of bike developments from Ducati throughout the season.

Byrne, who has two World superbike wins to his name after clinching a wild card double at Brands Hatch in 2003, begins his World Series campaign at Phillip Island in Australia on March 1.

Crusaders aim to make big leap into cup final

A CAPACITY crowd is expected to watch Kent Crusaders' bid to reach a national cup final today in a game described as the biggest in the club's history.

The county's top basketball side play Team Northumbria in the Patron's Cup semi-final, which is expected to draw a record 350 fans to Canterbury High School.

The winners will meet either Leeds Carnegie or London Mets in the final, which is played next month on the same day as other national basketball finals.

Crusaders head coach Mads Olesen believes the benefits for the club would be massive if they reach the showpiece event.

He said: "It's the biggest game in the club's history and is a chance to show off to the whole country what we are all about."

"Everybody knows about it in the basketball world and it would raise our profile for sponsors and fans, so it would be huge."

Crusaders go into the game in good form in English Basketball League Division Two after beating leaders Leeds with the final shot of the game last weekend. After narrowly escaping relegation last season, the Crusaders are on course to reach the play-offs.

They are above today's opponents in the table and beat them 74-70 when the sides met in the north east earlier on this season, but Olesen doesn't see his side as favourites.

He said: "Northumbria have a track record where even if they're not doing well in the league they perform in the big games, so I would put our chances at 50/50. The two teams know each other well and I think it will come down to who shows up on the day."

Tip-off is at 1pm.

Kent add Hock as batting back up

By GLENN PEARSON

JAMES Hockley's return to the Kent fold is a sign the club are committed to investing in players from across the county, according to coach Simon Willis.

The 29-year-old played for the county between 1998 and 2002 although he found his appearances limited and became more of a feature in one-day cricket.

He scored more than 1,000 runs in one-day cricket and bowled useful off-spinners meaning his return to the club after seven years of not playing First Class cricket will more than likely see him feature in Kent's limited overs squad rather than the County Championship.

After scoring 583 runs at an average of 48 for Hartley Country Club in the Kent Premier League, Hockley will give hope to county-based players hoping to make the step up.

Value

Coach Simon Willis said: "If you look at every player we have signed this year, they are all a product of the Kent system and that includes spinner Rob Ferley. Hopefully that sends out a message that we are looking around the county if players are good enough."

"James has done well in the last few years in the Kent League and is someone we have kept an eye on since he was released."

"We had to look at the market to see what was value for money – we could have signed a second-string batter we knew nothing about but that would have been a much higher risk."

The club is holding a trial during half-term for potential domestic players outside the county, but Willis has already been running his eye over some potential new players.

Dave Burton, 23, featured in Kent's pre-season games last year before securing a move to Middlesex. He has been training with Kent this week and the medium pace bowler is just one of several who will be hoping for a place at St Lawrence.

Willis added: "We have been looking at lots of players because as people know, we have a small squad and with potential England call ups we might need some more options. We will be inviting players from outside the county during half-term to see if there is anyone out there for us."

QUALIFIER: Gerard Greene will play in China

China is in Greene's hand after qualifying

GERARD Greene recorded the best win of a disappointing season to qualify for the China Open last weekend.

The 35-year-old, who lives in Rainham, beat 2007 Shanghai Masters champion Dominic Dale 5-1 at the qualifying tournament in Prestatyn. Following an earlier victory against Andy Lee, it booked his place in the Beijing tournament.

It put an end to defeats in qualifying events for five tournaments, securing only his second appearance at a ranking event this season and the first since the Northern Ireland Trophy in August.

The run of form has seen Greene slip to 34 in the provisional rankings, but a good performance in China would see him net crucial ranking points and return to the top 32 for next season.

Next up for Greene is arguably the biggest match of his season as he competes in the qualifying event for the World Snooker Championships in Sheffield. He needs two wins next month to seal a fourth career appearance at the Crucible in April.

Duo drive for Walker Cup place

KENT golfers Tom Sherreard and Matt Haines hope to catch the eye of Walker Cup selectors while on England duty at the Jones Cup Invitational tournament in America next week.

Sherreard from Maidstone and Haines from Medway are part of the eight-man England team to battle against the best amateur golfers in the world in the 54-hole event which begins next Friday.

The tournament is a prelude to the Walker Cup, the amateur game's version of the Ryder Cup, which begins on September 12 at Merion Golf Club in Pennsylvania.

Both Sherreard and Haines have one eye on trying to impress selectors at next week's Jones Cup at Georgia's Ocean Hills Golf Club.

The Walker Cup follows the format of the Ryder Cup with the best amateurs from Great Britain and Ireland taking on America in a match play event.

A good performance at the Walker Cup can often lead to amateur golfers making the step up to the professional game.

Sherreard, 21, who starred at last year's Open Championship at Royal Birkdale by finishing in 19th place, admitted one of the reasons he has decided to stay an amateur is to play in the Walker Cup.

He said: "The Walker Cup was certainly in my mind when I went into the Open

ON COURSE: Matt Haines (left) and Tom Sherreard are bidding for Walker Cup spots

Championship and my performance there should really help me try and make the squad."

The Chart Hills Golf Club member is based in America studying at Georgia State University and feels there are advantages and disadvantages to be had from playing regularly in the States.

He said: "There are far more tournaments to play in out there compared to Britain which is good for my game, but it allows the USA team to see how I play which could be a problem."

Haines, who has won the McEvoy Trophy and a regular feature in the England amateur team, is likely to be considered for place in the Walker Cup team, so an impressive performance next week could guarantee him a spot in the team.

Haines and Sherreard are set to begin their Jones Cup campaign next Friday.

Euro aces ready for winter series

A HOST of European Rallycross stars are expected at Lydden Hill next Saturday to take part in the final round of the Winter Rallycross Series.

The Dover race circuit received more than 50 entries for the event as drivers aim to learn the track before the opening round of the European Rallycross Championship in April. The track itself has undergone a number of changes with a new section constructed.

In the first round of the Winter Rallycross Series last month, Liam Doran stormed to victory and is aiming to continue his form and take the title.

Managing director Amy Doran said: "We are expecting a good crowd for the event as this is the last chance for all the European drivers to come over and practice on a circuit which is brand new to them."

The circuit faces a final inspection from the FIA following the event to make sure the facility is ready to host the European Rallycross Championship on Easter Monday.

PICK: Martin van Jaarsveld is also on the auction list to take part in the IPL series

'I COULD EARN A BOB OR TWO'

Kent captain on list for place in lucrative Indian Twenty20 series

EXCLUSIVE

By GLENN PEARSON

KENT could have a major decision to make this week if skipper Rob Key and vice-captain Martin van Jaarsveld are picked at the Indian Premier League (IPL) auction.

The two Kent batsmen were shock names on the list to take part in the multi-million pound Twenty20 competition, although with 146 other players to fit into eight teams, or franchises as they are known, they will do well to be included.

Bidding

The IPL teams will bid for players at an auction in Goa on Friday with the bidding for England's star batsman Kevin Pietersen set to start at $1.35 million.

In the event captain Key and arguably the club's best batsman, van Jaarsveld, were to be picked by one of the franchises, Kent, and the players themselves, would have a big decision to make.

The tournament takes place between April 10 and May 29, meaning Key and van Jaarsveld would miss three County Championship games, eight Friends Provident Trophy ties and two Twenty20 matches.

Key, 29, was only made aware of his name being on the auction list when contacted earlier this week by Kent on Sunday, while the club were also unaware until we broke the news to them on Thursday.

The county's skipper was surprised he made the list of 21 English players and was typically humble about his chances of being picked by one of the eight Indian franchises.

"To be honest I haven't got any aspirations and I don't see myself as having much of a chance," he said. "It was one of those things when I was asked 'do you want to be on it' and I thought I have nothing to lose, but I'm not holding out much hope of getting the gig."

"I thought I would see what happens but I think there'll be a few people disappointed with it really. My guess is the big guns of England like the Pietersens and Flintoffs will certainly get picked up but from then on you're not really sure who else."

The IPL has attracted the top names in the sport and would certainly represent an unbelievable opportunity for Key and van Jaarsveld. Not just presenting a chance to play with and against international players, the IPL offers cricketers a chance to earn money more in line with footballers.

For Key, it will be a decision he needs to make only if selected on Friday.

He said: "What a fabulous opportunity to go and play in it, that's the way I really look at it. Not only financially, it's going to be the biggest competition in the world for cricket so to be a part of that - my days are numbered for passing up opportunities like that."

"I put my name forward for some extra cash to be honest. For me Twenty20 is the way to go, I'm not in the international side

WAIT AND SEE: Rob Key is not holding out much hope of being picked for a place in one of the eight IPL teams and if I did get a chance to go and play that, it speaks volumes about what people around the world think of you.

"If I did get picked up I would obviously have to start thinking about it, but we'll cross that bridge when it comes to it."

The club's chief executive, Paul Millman, told KoS a franchise would have to contact the county in order to approach one of their players and the chances of Kent's players being picked are slim.

He said: "If a franchise were to show an interest they would have to approach us and then there would be a discussion to be had. I think it's a long shot but it's very flattering that people are interested in Kent players. Let's see what happens."

League clubs target Darts ace

SEVERAL Football League clubs are vying for the signature of Dartford striker Cody McDonald, writes David Pritchard.

The 22-year-old forward has attracted interest from a host of Championship clubs including Charlton Athletic and Crystal Palace after averaging a goal per game since signing for the Darts in October. He went on trial with Norwich City last weekend but no official offer had been made when KoS went to press.

According to his manager, Tony Burman, Dartford have learnt the lessons of one of the club's former young stars, Dave Martin, who made the switch from the Darts to Palace two years ago.

Martin went for just £25,000 before being sold to Millwall a year later in a move which could rise to £100,000, based on appearances.

While Burman will not stand in McDonald's way of a dream move to the Championship, the Martin deal has made him more confident of getting the right deal for Dartford.

He said: "I'm a little more experienced now. Cody is a Dartford player and will play when we want him to play. There are lots of things to have in a contract, but it has to be suitable for the club and Cody. It won't happen unless we get what we feel is a reasonable price for him."

Burman was alerted to McDonald's talents last January when he impressed for a Witham Town side beaten 4-0 by Dartford. Although there is a huge gap between the Ryman Premier and the Championship, the Darts boss believes McDonald has what it takes to succeed at a high level.

He said: "Fitness-wise it would take him a little while to adjust, as you would expect, but if you're asking does he have the ability - then I think yes."

The transfer window closes tomorrow at 5pm.
